Coal Accord Ends Threat Of Northern Mines Strike

Southern, Western Pits Not Affected By Tentative Pact; Walkouts Possible

By Alfred Friendly
Post Reporter

Tentative agreement on a contract yesterday between John L. Lewis' mine workers and owners of Northern and "captive" coal mines virtually ended a threat of a coal strike next Monday of Nation-wide extent.

The settlement was announced yesterday afternoon. It is tentative and still has to be reduced to contract terms and ratified by the parties. But these features appeared to be only formalities.

Not participating in the settlement, however, were the southern mine owners and those of the Midwest and Far West. Thus there is a strong likelihood that a strike will develop when the miners' present annual vacation period ends next week.

Lewis told reporters yesterday, tersely, that no meeting was scheduled with the southern operator group.

Terms Not Announced

A strike in that area, therefore, appears most probable. The western groups, which had been bargaining with the Northern owners, split away at the last moment yesterday. Nevertheless, it was believed that some, if not all of them, would follow suit and accept the the northerners.
the Northerners.

What those terms are was not announced nor immediately ascertainable. They are believed to include, however, the grant of a 35-cent-an-hour flat wage increase, plus a reduction of the workday from nine to eight hours, including one portal-to-portal hour—the time taken for miners to travel between the pit head and their place of work.

The settlement covers mine operations in Pennsylvania, Maryland, northern West Virginia and Ohio, plus all captive mines—those owned by steel and railroad companies for their own use. Not covered are the southern mines and those in Indiana, Illinois and west of the Mississippi.

Owners Make Announcement

The announcement was made by a representative of the owners, after a long day of conferences. He said:

"Negotiations for northern commercial coal operators and the captive mines, together with representatives of the United Mine Workers, announce that a tentative agreement in principle has been reached subject to the terms of a written contract and subject to the approval of the parties."

A union official said that these parties produce about one-third of the Nation's annual output of 520 million tons of bituminous coal.

Lewis subsequently announced that he is summoning his 200-man policy committee here for a meeting on Saturday. Theoretically, this group must ratify any agreement, but they never have failed to accept Lewis' suggestions.

Owners Make Concessions

Yesterday's agreement appeared to be the fruit of offers made last week by the United States Steel Corp. and the Pittsburgh Consolidation Coal Co. Their first concession was to meet the union wage

Long Arm of Law Declines to Act on Ring in Bathtub

A husband-wife argument as to who should remove the ring from around the bathtub wound up in the Office of the United States Attorney yesterday.

In her application for an assault warrant, Margaret Dabney, 35, of 623 10th st. ne., said: "I was sitting in the living room after dinner. My husband came downstairs and asked me to wash out the bathtub. I gave him a box of Spic and Span and told him to do it himself. He hit me over the head with a chair."

Assistant U. S. Attorney Evan Davis closed the case after Mrs. Dabney refused to testify against her husband.

Overrules Truscott

Barrett Reverses Himself, Okays Complaint Pocketing

(Text of Barrett's Order, Page 8)

By Robert Bruskin
Post Reporter

Police Superintendent Robert J. Barrett started his "clean slate" administration yesterday by issuing written orders for the first time formally authorizing "pocketing" of crime complaints.

His written orders to the entire police force, in effect, modified and superseded one issued Tuesday by Chief of Detectives Floyd A. Truscott, and reversed his own position of the previous day.

Truscott's first official action was to eliminate hidden crime complaints which had been exposed by The Washington Post. The only exception made by Truscott are cases where public knowledge would hamper detection of the criminal.

Barrett yesterday accepted that one exception and added two more, which in effect still gave police the power to decide if a crime complaint would be left out of crime statistics, left off the police teletype or buried in Detective Bureau and Precinct records.

Truscott, who was sworn in as detective chief Tuesday, same day that Barrett became superintendent, declined to make any comment on the unexpected reversal by his new chief.

Soon after Barrett's order was issued, the Washington Criminal Justice Association, civic watchdog over local law enforcement agencies, announced:

"We cannot be satisfied with any police administration that does not present a true, factual perspective of the actual crime situation in the District of Columbia."

The executive committee of the association decided to ask Barrett for a meeting "to discuss the discrepancies revealed and any other misrepresentations that might exist in recording statistical data."

The system used in the Detective Bureau during the time Barrett was chief of detectives, which minimized the amount of crime committed in Washington, was ringed with a few restrictions in Barrett's new order.

In order to "pocket" a case to keep it out of the regular handling laid down by police regulations, Barrett ordered that the investigating officer "must obtain the permission of his immediate superior to place the complaint in the 'hold' classification."

Barrett's order also declared:

"Under no circumstances shall any complaint be 'held' for a period of longer than 30 days from the date of the commission of the offense without the written approval of the commanding officer" of the precinct or bureau. Rea-

Child Centers Left in Cold By Money Bill

Technicality Omits Care Projects From Emergency Measure

Congress yesterday scored a technical knockout on Washington's child day care centers while clearing $813,000 in emergency cash for other District agencies.

For the day care centers, officials at the Capitol and the District Building said they could see no sign of rescue until money for them is provided in the regular city appropriation bill.

The regular bill is unlikely to clear Congress for another two weeks or more. Four of the six centers expected to operate this year are closed, and the other two are operating on a volunteer basis.

Emergency Authority Granted

Along with the list of cash for the District, the appropriation bill gave authority for the District and Federal agencies to incur obligations until their regular appropriation bills are signed.

Even in this proviso, however, officials found no relief for the day care centers. The technical reason was that a budget estimate for them had not been sent to the Capitol from the President by July 2, a prerequisite for authority given in the bill for agencies to incur obligations. Congress has approved and the President has signed legislation authorizing $150,000 to continue the centers another year.

Biggest single cash item for the District in the bill was $205,000 for public welfare, to permit payments to the blind, old age and dependent children cases, and general relief. District officials said it would take about 10 days to clear the checks after the bill is approved.

Other major cash items for continuing District operations this month included $50,000 each for school repairs, recreation, Police and Firemen's pensions, streets and bridges, sewer and for operation of the District's buildings.

Also included were $150,000 for the Refuse Division, $100,000 for the Sewer Division, $23,000 for the water system, and $15,000 for employes' compensation.

City agencies which got $10,000 each included the Fire Department, Police Department, Public Library, Central Garage, Electrical Division, Department of Vehicles and Traffic, and the Division of Trees and Parking.

Emergency Money Bill Is Approved

Compromise Ends Fears of Fundless Government Paydays

The House and Senate yesterday broke a two-day deadlock over cash for fundless Government agencies with a compromise enabling them to carry on until they have to meet a payroll.

A hybrid emergency money bill, ironing out House-Senate differences over just how to keep the Government operating until regular appropriations are cleared, was rushed through both houses and sent to the White House.

The action lifted the threat of delayed paydays until July 21 at least for thousands of Government workers as well as the possibility that veterans' benefit payments be halted temporarily.

Many Bills Unpassed

The stopgap measure became necessary because most of the major appropriation bills for the new fiscal year, which began Tuesday, have not been passed by Congress.

Both the Senate and the House had proposed different ways of meeting the problem, and a deadlock developed.

Under the conference group plan, with certain exceptions, all Government agencies will be allowed to operate during July—or on a monthly basis until an appropriation is completed—at the lowest of these rates: One twelfth of last year's appropriations or one twelfth of new budget estimates.

Government money tension meanwhile was further relieved by final congressional clearance of a $1,675,158,630 Labor-Federal Security appropriation bill.

Sent to the White House on the heels of the previously dispatched Treasury-Postoffice supply bill, now law, it left 10 major money measures still to be cleared. The bill carried $105,455,000 less than the President recommended, and 10 million less than the House originally voted.

Taber Orders Speed

Under speed orders from House Appropriations Chairman John Taber (R., N. Y.), the House meanwhile passed a 339-million-dollar War Department civil functions appropriations bill, cut 43 million dollars below the budget. Most of the money was for flood control and navigation. The House refused to restore any of the cut. The War Department's nonmilitary bill now goes to the Senate, where Appropriations Committee action will be sped.

She Preferred Career

Judge Voids Marriage of Coed Who Refused to Bear Children

Justice Edward M. Curran yesterday annulled the marriage of a coed who refused to bear children because it might interfere with her hopes of a career as a newspaperwoman.

The annulment was granted in District Court at the request of the husband, Martin Carlin, 30, of 417 Gallatin st. nw. A Veterans' Administration employe.

Carlin married Eva Marie Hoehn, 27, in October, 1944, while she was a Wac and he was an infantryman in Alabama.

Carlin stated that before the marriage, she promised that she would raise a family at their earliest convenience. After the marriage, Carlin testified, he and his wife saw each other but spasmodically until they were discharged and came here to live in March, 1946.

At that time, Carlin said, his wife told him that she was interested in being a newspaperwoman and felt that children would interfere with her career.

Justice Curran ruled that Mrs. Carlin's actions "fraudulently induced" Carlin to marry her and "give his consent to the marriage by fraud."

Carlin testified that he left his wife on May 10, 1946, when she stated she "didn't want to burden herself with children, but was satisfied to remain in his household if there were no children."

In his suit, Carlin said that it was abhorrent to him and repugnant to his moral and religious training that he should remain married under these terms. He said that, had she informed him of her intention, he would not have taken the marriage vows with her.

Bindeman said his client is of the Hebrew faith.

Mrs. Carlin is now studying journalism in the University of Montana, according to testimony.

GOP Decides To Repass Tax Cut Bill

New Knutson Plan With January Date To Be Sped Through House and Senate

By Robert C. Albright
Post Reporter

The Congressional GOP high command yesterday decided to repass through Congress and speed to the White House a second four billion dollar income tax reduction bill, making only one change in the vetoed original.

The new Knutson bill, dating 10½ to 30 per cent tax cuts from January 1 of next year, instead of July 1, 1947, received a clear track at a top level conference of House and Senate Republican leaders.

Senate GOP Steersman Robert A. Taft (Ohio) announced the decision. Later Speaker Joseph W. Martin, jr (R., Mass.), announced this hurried timetable for shuttling the bill through the House:

1. Ways and Means committee approval of the bill at a special meeting today.

2. Rules committee action Monday on a "closed rule," barring all noncommittee amendments.

3. House passage Tuesday, after two or three hours of debate.

In fact, it was the House leadership decision to go ahead, whether or not the Senate acted this session, that influenced the Senate decision to proceed.

Senator Taft, who had previously opposed action until there were definite assurances that the Senate could override another veto, agreed to go along despite some remaining doubt that the Senate can muster a two thirds over-riding vote.

A Democratic tax vote recheck, originally launched by Senator Harry Flood Byrd (D., Va.), has turned up five Democrats who would switch to the January 1 bill if the President vetoes it again.

This apparently assures 61 "sure" votes for the bill in another overriding test. If all Senators are present and voting, an "Aye" vote of 64 would be needed.

Some Republican and Democratic advocates of the cut plainly doubt the President would veto a January 1 tax cut, especially if the bill receives a two-thirds majority in both Houses on initial passage.

House Two-Thirds Forecast

Martin forecast without qualification that the bill will pass the House by better than a two-thirds margin. Taft declined to predict what the Senate majority will be. A poll by Senate Finance Chairman Eugene D. Millikin (R., Colo.) is still in progress.

Goal is to pass the bill through both Houses by the end of next week, to avert any hitch in July 26 adjournment plans. Taft conceded, however, that the Senate may not be able to complete initial action next week, adding:

"Of course, we don't have to adjourn by July 26."

Speed was stressed in view of President's right to hold the bill 10 days (not counting Sundays) before deciding to sign or veto.

President Could "Pocket Veto"

If Congress adjourned before the end of that 10-day period, the President could "pocket veto" the bill. Leaders decided to wait out the White House decision, and put any veto to a session's end vote, regardless of whether it holds up adjournment.

Paris Parley Ends in Failure As Russia Rejects U. S. Plan; Warns West on Acting Alone

Soviet Move Is Seen Here, However, as Giving Other Powers Clear Road Ahead

By Ferdinand Kuhn, Jr.
Post Reporter

The break-up of the Paris Conference yesterday has exposed Soviet motives and attitudes more clearly than any event since the end of the war, in the opinion of informed authorities here.

It was always expected that Russia would try to delay or otherwise frustrate the European reconstruction program outlined by Secretary Marshall a month ago.

But officials here never believed she would slam the door on herself, and do it with as loud and unmistakable a bang as Foreign Minister Molotov did yesterday.

This is what Russia has done, and it is felt here that the consequences of her action will be immense and far-reaching. Nobody tried to shut her out of this economic program, yet she has taken a quick look at it and shut herself out.

In Position to Go Ahead

In doing so, she has restored the diplomatic initiative to the West, authorities here believe, and has left the democratic Western world in an unassailable moral position to go ahead without her.

Naturally, American officials will regret anything that hardens the division of Europe between east and west. But they will argue that the division exists already, and that anyone who doubts it should try to cross Germany from the western to the Soviet zone.

Secretary Marshall firmly refused at his press conference yesterday to comment on the Paris developments, although he had read press bulletins on the subject.

He referred questioners to the exact language of his Harvard speech, which he said had been carefully considered. That speech specified that a European reconstruction program "should be a joint one, agreed to by a number, if not all, European nations."

It is taken for granted here that the British, French and other western Europeans will proceed to draw up a program for pooling their resources, assessing their needs, doing whatever they can to satisfy them on a European basis, and then coming to the United States later in the year for the remainder.

Seen Up to Europeans

Secretary Marshall's reticence indicated that the United States would continue to leave the drawing up of such a program to the Europeans themselves—at least at this stage. In view of what happened at Paris, it was felt to have been doubly wise that the United States was not even represented by an observer.

It is also assumed here that the United States will do nothing, by word or deed, in coming months to prevent eastern European countries, or, for that matter, Russia herself, from joining in a reconstruction program at any stage.

Two situations, in particular, will be watched intently in Washington in the aftermath of yesterday's breakup in Paris.

The first is the position of Poland and Czechoslovakia, both of them eager to join a European recovery program, and both of them im-

Marshall's Plan and Soviet's

Here are Secretary of State Marshall's proposal and Soviet Foreign Minister Molotov's counterproposal:

MARSHALL'S—Each European country should survey its resources and needs and fit them into a master relief program. Suppose one country has a surplus of coal, and is lacking in foodstuffs. That country would agree to supply coal to neighboring countries in exchange for food. The United States might furnish additional supplies to round out the first nation's economy. Such procedure would also suffice for the second's economy.

MOLOTOV'S—Each country wanting to participate develop its own program, list its needs and ask the United States for them.

Boatyard Shop Hit by Bomb From Plane

Missile Believed Accidentally Dropped; Craft Unidentified

St. Michael's, Md., July 2 (AP).—Four men escaped injury today when a small bomb, believed accidentally dropped from an unidentified plane, hit a boatyard shop at Wittman and demolished one end of the building, State police reported.

A second bomb exploded in a field about 50 yards away, digging a large crater.

J. Walter Jones, proprietor of the shop located three miles from here, told police he and three helpers were in a one-story frame building when they heard a plane pass overhead.

A few seconds later there was a terrific explosion, and one end of the structure collapsed, peppering the men with debris. All were momentarily stunned, but otherwise unhurt.

Map locates Easton-St. Michael's area (circled) on the Eastern Shore of Maryland, where a Navy plane dropped two bombs yesterday

Wittman is about 40 airline miles southeast of Baltimore, across Chesapeake Bay.

State police at Easton were unable to determine the origin or destination of the plane. There is considerable noncommercial flying in the area, but no aviation training centers of the armed forces are in the immediate vicinity, they said.

[In Washington, both the Army and Navy, on the basis of preliminary investigation, said they had no bomb-carrying planes in the vicinity at the time.]

Police said they found a bomb fragment to which a broken piece of a bomb shackle was attached. The shackle is used to hold the missiles under the plane fuselage and police believed it broke and freed the bombs.

State police said the bomb, described as small, apparently grazed the building and landed beside a concrete foundation, which was lifted out of the ground. A 20-foot boat upon which the four men were working was wrecked.

D. W. Banning of Wittman, said the hole caused by the second bomb was "large enough to hold a locomotive."

Services Urge Regular Status For Women

Eisenhower, Nimitz Favor Bills Providing For 32,000 in 3 Arms

By John G. Norris
Post Reporter

America's top military and naval leaders yesterday urged Congress to make the Wac, Waves and women Marines permanent parts of our defense establishments.

General of the Army Eisenhower, Army Chief of Staff, and Fleet Admiral Nimitz, Chief of Naval Operations, appeared before the Senate Armed Services Committee to laud the wartime work of the women reserves.

They called for prompt passage of twin bills to authorize about 32,000 commissioned and enlisted women in the Regular Army, Navy and Marine Corps.

Generals Carl Spaatz, AAF chief; Jacob L. Devers, Army Ground Forces commander, and A. A. Vandegrift, Marine commandant, and several top admirals submitted supporting statements.

Eisenhower said the recruiting of women would aid the Army's manpower problem. The volunteer enlistment program has not satisfied military chiefs, though an upsurge the past two weeks has helped.

Training Center at Camp Lee

Service chiefs revealed that the WAC training center will be established at Camp Lee, Va., while WAVE "boot" training will be conducted at Great Lakes, Ill., if the bills pass.

Both services plan "coed" classes in many specialties such as training of yeomen and for other paper work jobs, the committee was told.

Admiral Nimitz declared that he had been "one of the doubters" at first, but that he now is thoroughly sold on the WAVES. He declared that in some Navy jobs they are more efficient than men.

The two Administration-backed bills before the committee provide that the authorized enlisted strength of WAC, WAVES, and Women Marines shall be 2 per cent of the over-all strength. The services, however, have different plans for their women's groups.

9100 in WACS NOW

Maj. Gen. W. S. Paul, Army personnel chief and Col. Mary A. Hallaren, WAC director, said the present WAC strength of about 9100 will be recruited to just short of 20,000. Perhaps another 20,000 Reserve women also will be employed on continuous active duty, Paul said.

Mrs. Oswald B. Lord, chairman of the National Civilian Advisory Committee for the WAC, also appeared in support of the bill. She said that members of the group had visited WAC units all over the world to evaluate their work. Genevieve Forbes Herrick, a member of the committee, recently submitted a commendatory report on postwar services of the WAC in Europe.

Britain and France Defy Red Threat, Assert They Will Go Ahead Together

Texts of Statements by Bevin, Bidault and Molotov, Pages 4 and 5

Paris, July 2 (AP).—The three-power conference on American aid to Europe collapsed late today.

Russia rejected British and French proposals for an economic steering committee and warned the two western powers "against the consequences" of going ahead without Soviet cooperation.

France and Britain promptly defied what British Foreign Secretary Ernest Bevin called the Soviet "threats" and announced they would pursue their attempts to implement the program of United States Secretary of State George C. Marshall along with all countries which want to join them.

Soviet Foreign Minister V. M. Molotov declared the British-French plan would result in "dividing Europe into two groups of states and creating new difficulties in the relations between them."

"The Soviet Government considers it necessary to caution the governments of Great Britain and France against the consequences of such action," Molotov declared.

Bevin Makes Heated Reply

Bevin, in a heated outburst, called Molotov's statement a "travesty of facts."

He added:

"Well, my country has faced grave consequences and threats before. But it is not the sort of prospect which will deter us from doing what we consider our duty. Nevertheless, I profoundly regret that threat. Our policy is to dominate none and to cooperate with everyone.

"We shall work as closely as we can with the U. N. and inform it and its various bodies and all the governments of what we are doing."

French Foreign Minister Georges Bidault blamed Russia for any possible division of Europe and said France had done all she could to avoid such a division.

Steering Committee Proposed

The British-French plan called for establishment of a steering or cooperation committee and a group of technical subcommittees to assemble information on the resources of European countries and sum up their needs by September 1.

It provided that participation by countries would be on a voluntary basis. It also provided that the whole project would be submitted to the U. N.'s Economic Commission for Europe which meets in Geneva Saturday.

Molotov, in rejecting the program, declared that it would constitute a threat to the sovereignty of other European nations and would result in interference with their internal affairs. He also said it was "incapable of yielding any positive results."

Italian Red Asks Plant Seizures to Back Price Plan

Rome, July 2 (AP).—The Communist secretary-general of Italy's six-million-member General Labor Confederation proposed tonight that the Italian government confiscate factories that do not regulate the prices of their goods in accordance with a plan drafted by the confederation to better working conditions.

Giuseppe di Vittorio, in an earlier interview, was quoted as saying that unless the government accepted confederation proposals for price control and rationing, "workers might occupy and operate the factories."

He later denied that statement, but at least a half dozen Italian reporters agreed that di Vittorio had warned of factory seizure and operation by workers.

In Naples demonstrations provoked by an increase in the cost of bread went on all night. Demonstrators attacked black market stands, where bread from American flour was on sale, and blocked traffic. To pacify them, the government promised to double bread distribution to dealers today.

State May Halt Trucks

D. C. Stores Asked to Collect Sales Tax From Md. Buyers

All District merchants were asked yesterday to apply for Maryland sales tax licenses and to collect the tax on all sales to Maryland residents.

The request was made by Walter E. Kennedy, head of the Maryland Retail Sales Tax Division, who admitted, however, that he could not "force" collection of the tax if delivery were made by common carrier or U. S. mails.

Kennedy, speaking at a mass meeting sponsored by the Board of Trade in the U. S. Chamber of Commerce auditorium, told 700 dealers that he was not threatening prosecution if they did not collect the tax. But he said he could, if necessary, halt store-owned delivery trucks at the State line if the tax were not levied.

Kennedy explained that when a store-owned truck crossed the Maryland line, the firm was considered to "be doing business in Maryland and subject to its regulations."

Marylanders, who received their goods purchased in the District by common carrier, the mails or who picked them up in the District, were subject to the "use tax," Kennedy said.

This is a companion levy to the sales tax designed to catch Free State residents doing their buying outside the State but using or consuming the goods within the State. It is computed at the same rate as the sales tax, but is admittedly "difficult to enforce."

Kennedy said he "was asking publicly and hopefully" that District merchants impose the tax on "known" Maryland residents, without threat of prosecution.

He told the dealers at a 3½-hour session that "from a dollars and cents standpoint I don't think anyone will be hurt very much."

"Nobody likes taxes," he declared, a remark which brought applause from the merchants. "But suppose the District had got the sales tax adopted, the shoe would have been on the other foot and I am willing to lay a bet right now that you'd be doing just what I'm doing—asking for help," the affable administrator said, smiling.

Among other replies made by Kennedy to a lengthy string of questions were:

1. Peanuts, popcorn, hot dogs and other refreshments sold at an amusement park were taxable, since "it is doubtful if any will be eaten off the premises or outside the park."

2. Sales on boats, such as pleasure craft, when in Maryland waters are taxable. He pointed out that the Potomac River, except that part in the District, was part of Maryland.

3. Gifts purchased in the Dis-

Asks FBI to Speed Check

Marshall Says Fired Employes Had Ties With Foreign Agents

Some of the 10 State Department employes dismissed last week had indirect associations with representatives of foreign powers, Secretary Marshall told his press conference yesterday.

The Secretary said he had asked the FBI to give priority to a "name-check" of other State Department employes, in accordance with the Executive order of March 22 which called for such a check on all Federal employes.

"I wish to emphasize," said the Secretary in a statement, "that I am certain that the great bulk of employes of the Department are wholly loyal and conscientious. We are not engaged in a witch-hunt and I will not permit unfounded charges based on prejudice to force our hand.

"I mean to see that the rights of the personnel as well as the interest of the Government are secured."

Answering questions, the Secretary said he had adopted the firm policy that department employes would be dismissed whenever evidence creates concrete suspicion against them. He added that no employe would be crucified.

He said all 10 knew why they had been dismissed, and none had tried to appeal to him personally. A department spokesman said later that a panel of department officials would be set up to enable them to make statements, if they wished.

Murray Plans Hearings In Missouri Valley

No Slump in Sight, Congress Unit Told

Favors Insurance

Health Bill 'Dole,' Says Henderson

By The Associated Press

Leon Henderson, former price administrator, yesterday criticized a health program by Senator Taft (R., Ohio) as a "medical dole."

Opposing the Taft plan for a 200-million-dollar Federal contribution to State health funds, Henderson called it "a political sop to the demands for a better medical system."

The former head of OPA testified before a Senate Public Welfare subcommittee as chairman of the executive committee of Americans for Democratic Action.

Urging a Nation-wide health insurance program patterned after the social security system, Henderson contended that would be the "only democratic way and the most economically feasible."

Representatives of four organizations urged that Congress enact a compulsory system of prepaid national health insurance.

They asked for approval of a bill by Senator Murray (D., Mont.) and others which would authorize such a plan to be financed with a 3 per cent payroll tax.

They also criticized the so-called Taft health bill which would authorize expenditure of 200 million dollars a year for each of the next five years to aid the States in setting up medical care programs for low-income groups.

The scheduled witnesses included:

Andrew J. Biemiller, Washington, speaking for Americans for Democratic Action, who said "the Social Security principle is sound, for it removes the whole administration of the medical care program from the arena of partisan politics."

John P. Peters of New Haven, Conn., speaking for the Committee of Physicians for the Improvement of Medical Care, Inc., who told the subcommittee: "The majority of the people desire access to medical care which the proponents of this (Taft) bill confess is not available. This bill offers them these services only after they have been reduced to seeking charity through the indignity of a means test. It makes not even a gesture toward the improvement of medical care."

The Rev. Alson J. Smith, New York, representing the Methodist Federation for Social Action, who said his group was "enthusiastically and prayerfully in full and hearty indorsement" of the Murray bill.

Dr. Allan M. Butler, professor of pediatrics at Harvard University, Cambridge, Mass., appearing for the Progressive Citizens of America. He told the Senators that the American Medical Association acknowledged that families with $4000 a year incomes could meet the expenses of serious illness.

But 3 Businessmen Have 'Ifs' in Their Prognostications

By Marshall Andrews
Post Reporter

Three businessmen yesterday assured Congress, with some "ifs," that a depression is not now in sight.

Dr. Leverett S. Lyon of the Chicago Association of Commerce and Industry, told the Joint Committee on the Economic Report that the country faces an inflation rather than a depression and rationing may again be necessary.

John H. Williams, Harvard economist and vice president of the Federal Reserve Bank of New York, said "no convincing evidence of a recession had yet appeared."

Millard D. Brown, president of the Pennsylvania Manufacturers Association, said there would be no depression "if we restore a free economy in this country."

The committee, under chairmanship of Senator Taft (R., Ohio), was set up by law to advise and consult with the President on national economic welfare with a view to preventing future cycles of boom and bust.

Economic Emergency Near

Dr. Lyon told the committee "we are approaching, if we have not already reached, an economic emergency" which may call for return of rationing in some lines. Food, he declared, should be rationed first.

"An important reason for present high prices," he said, "is that we have 58 million people working and drawing wages and bidding in the market for goods."

The American people, Lyon declared, should be told the full cost of an economic war against communism and its effect on their own lives.

"The facts of life in this matter," he said, "are concealed under such gilded terms as "fighting Communism with dollars. The realities would be far more clear to the American people if it were pointed out that we are really fighting Communists with the food from their tables and the clothes that would otherwise be on their backs."

Slump Wouldn't Be Serious

Williams said that even should a recession occur "it seems unlikely to be serious or prolonged." He told the committee that "a combination of rising incomes and falling prices is the heart of economic progress under the free enterprise system."

There is a disinclination, Williams said, to regard wage rates as both income and cost, with the result that raising wages before productivity increases results in canceling out the wage gains. The 1937 depression, he asserted, was the result of an "unprecedented" increase in wages before productivity was increased.

Brown insisted that prices must be "allowed to fluctuate according to supply and demand" if the system of free enterprise is to survive. A controlled economy, he added, is always a static economy.

"Our economy," he said, "has become too big and intricate for analysis. Therefore, we are not wise enough to legislate controls that will solve our future economic problems."

Yesterday's session of the committee, its tenth, was the last of its current series of hearings.

May-Garsson Case Will Go To Jury Today

By Dillard Stokes
Post Reporter

Justice Henry A. Schweinhaut yesterday in instructions to the jury swept most of the defense in the May-Garsson bribe-conspiracy case out the window.

The case will go to the District Court jury at 9 a. m. today. The justice said that despite the 2½ months it has taken to hear, the case hangs on a few simple questions. They are:

1. Did Henry and Murray Garsson conspire with former Congressman A. J. May to buy his influence as House Military chairman for their munition companies—which piled up 70 odd million dollars in war orders?

If they did, and a single act was done to carry out the deal, then the justice said the verdict must be, guilty of conspiracy. If they did not, they must be cleared.

Cites $5000 Check

2. Was the $5000 Garsson check that May cashed here on August 22, 1944, part of a payoff from the munition makers?

If so, May is guilty of taking, and the Garssons of paying, unlawful fees to a Congressman, as charged in Count III of the indictment.

3. Did May agree with the Garssons to take $15,477.60 from their Batavia Metals Co., and $38,156.47 from their Erie Basin Metals Co.? If so, all are guilty under Count IV of the indictment.

Here are some of the things Justice Schweinhaut told the jury did not matter in the case—things upon which the defense had relied greatly:

Whether May, if he took Garsson money, later gave it back.

Whether the Garsson companies were good, or bad, producers of war goods.

Whether or not Army officers discriminated against the Garssons because they were Jews.

Whether or not May did anything, or tried to do anything for the Garssons.

Charles J. Margiotti, defense attorney, protested the justice gave more weight—by tone of voice and gesture of hand—to some parts of his instructions than he did to others. Schweinhaut ordered that the record show that he did not believe he did anything of the sort.

The jury might have started their deliberations at 5 p. m. yesterday. But they will not begin until this morning, because there was no place for them to be locked up overnight, if they had not agreed on a verdict during the evening.

5 Congressional Special Elections Seen in 3 Months

By The Associated Press

Five special congressional elections—three of them in the next three months—may give national politicians some leads to work on for 1948.

They result from:

1. The election of Representative D'Alesandro (D., Md.) as mayor of Baltimore in May.
2. The death of Representative Bradley (R., Mich.) May 24.
3. The death of Representative Gerlach (R., Pa.) May 5.
4. The nomination of Representative Jones (R., Ohio) to the Federal Communications Commission.
5. The nomination of Representative Rafiel (D., N. Y.) to the Federal bench in New York.

The first election is coming up July 15 in the Third Maryland's district.

Drive to Cut Child Traffic Toll Begins

A summer-long drive to cut the District's child and teen-age traffic toll gets underway today.

The drive, which has the backing of the District government, will be aided by such slogans as "Don't Guess What a Child Will Do—Drive Carefully".

Children will be cautioned: "Don't Strike Out On Your Vacation—Play in a Safe Place!"

All official city departmnts and civic, business and fraternal associations are being urged to back the program "with every educational means at their disposal," according to A. Julian Brylawski, chairman of the education comittee of the Commissioners' Traffic Advisory Board, which is sponsoring the program.

Fifty-five persons between the ages of 5 and 19 have been injured in traffic here since summer school vacations began on June 18.

The D. C. Inter-Industry Safety Committee and taxicab, milk and bakery companies will distribute and use about 5000 posters and 10,000 bumper strips.

The Capital Hransit Company will use posters in its buses and streetcars.

The Goodyear Rubber Company blimp will display the slogans in neon this month.

The D. C. Recreation Department and the Child Traffic Safety Council will put safety posters at all District playgrounds.

The drive will be officially launched this morning at 10 a. m. when John Russell Young, president of the District Board of Commissioners, confers with traffic officials on the campaign program.

Senate Group Votes Federal Aid to Schools

By Mary Spargo
Post Reporter

The Senate Committee on Labor and Public Welfare yesterday approved a bill providing 300 million dollars a year in Federal funds to aid the States in educating America's children.

Blocked behind the session-end log jam of money bills, however, Federal aid to education is given little chance of congressional enactment before the summer adjournment.

Senator Robert A. Taft (R., Ohio), spokesman for a joint Senate-House conference of Republican leaders that met yesterday, said the education bill had come up for discussion, but that its place on the now-crowded calendar had not been determined.

Taft said the question of Federal support to education had been left over to a later meeting of the joint leadership group.

One Before House Group

A similar bill has received the approval of a House Education subcommittee, but has not yet been acted upon by the full House group.

The Senate group had previously tentatively approved the measure, which provides a minimum Federal allotment to each State of $5 a child between the ages of 5 and 17, but had directed a clarifying change in language of the section dealing with aid to sectarian schools.

The new language provides that State educational authorities may use the Federal funds "for any current expenditure for elementary or secondary school purposes for which educational revenues derived from State or local sources may legally and constitutionally be expended in such State."

In reporting the bill, the committee pointed out that "vast numbers of American children receive an inadequate education or no education at all."

Millions Do Not Attend

More than five-million children between the ages of 5 and 17 inclusive attend no school whatever, the report said.

The most obvious symptom of the educational problem, the committee found, is the shortage of good teachers. The shortage, the report said, is traceable primarily to the inadequate pay they receive.

The report cited the variation in schools throughout the United States. In some well-financed school systems, the committee declared, $6000 or more per classroom was spent last year, while in some of the poorest States there were schools supported at less than $100 per classroom.

The educational inequalities, the committee pointed out, are primarily due to the differences in financial revenues of the various States.

Swiss Lift Curbs On Watch Exports

Bern, Switzerland, July 2 (AP)—The Swiss government has lifted export restrictions on watches to the United States and other dollar-bloc countries.

The action, effective July 1, came after one Swiss factory had closed down for four days in protest against what the factory management said was too low an export quota for this particular factory.

Federal Reserve Lets Treasury Bills Find Own Level

By The Associated Press

The Federal Reserve open market committee announced yesterday it will leave Treasury 90-day bills issued after July 10 free to find their interest rate in the money market.

For the last five years, the committee has held the rate on these bills at ⅜ of one per cent by publicly standing ready to buy all offered them by the Treasury or other sources at that rate.

The "unpegging," which officials acknowledged was virtually certain to increase the interest on these securities, will not apply to bills issued before July 10, the committee said. It made clear it will continue to buy all earlier issues offered it at the old rate.

The committee said its action was taken "after consultation" with Secretary of the Treasury Snyder.

demand. Yesterday and the day before, however, they apparently met part of Lewis' other side-issue demands.

As Lewis had posed them, these included, among others, the increase of the royalty payments to a miners' fund from 5 to 10 cents per ton and the retention of the Federal safety code in the new contract. This code had been worked out between Lewis and Interior Secretary Krug when the mines were in Government possession.

The Western operators had been reported as willing to meet the pay demand, and seemingly must have balked yesterday at some of the side issues.

The Southern owners, however, have insisted on meeting with Lewis in separate negotiations. These broke down a month ago and have not been resumed. The owners have never made a wage offer close to Lewis' demands.

Unless a new contract with them and the Western groups is reached before Monday, the miners will have another opportunity to follow their slogan of "no contract, no work." The previous contract has been between the union and the Government. It expired on June 30, when the mines were returned to their private owners. By that time, the miners had already begun their annual vacation of one week.

Elsewhere on the Nation's labor front:

In Pittsburgh, the CIO steelworkers executive board, meeting to form policy on the new Taft-Hartley bill, voted to eliminate "no strike" pledges from future contracts. The reason was that these can now be enforced by "harassing lawsuits" which might extract damage payments from unions for strikes, even though they were undertaken without union's sanction.

In New York, the Government made new efforts to arrange conferences between the Bethlehem Steel Co. and officials of the striking CIO shipbuilders union. The strike, seven days old, now involves 120,000 workers.

Report Cites Propaganda of U. S. Agencies

By The Associated Press

A House Expenditures Committee has asked the Justice Department to proceed against six Federal agencies to stop what the committee called illegal expenditures on "propaganda" to influence Congress.

The propaganda program, the committee charged in a report made public yesterday, was designed to build up public demand for enactment of the Wagner-Murray-Dingell bill providing compulsory health insurance.

The committee said key personnel in the agencies planned to set up "health workshops" in strategic areas, for the purpose "of propagandizing farm and labor leaders to build up an artificial, Federally-stimulated, public demand" for the legislation.

Citing a law against use of Federal funds for the purpose of influencing legislation," the committee named as "known to have participated in this campaign" the United States Public Health Service, the Children's Bureau, the Office of Education, the United States Employment Service, Agriculture Department and the Bureau of Research and Statistics of the Social Security Board.

The committee said workshops were held in St. Paul, Minn., and Jamestown, N. Dak. It added:

"All the evidence before your committee indicates that these health workshops were planned, conducted and largely financed with Federal funds, by a key group on the Government payroll, who used the workshop method of discussion to subtly generate public sentiment in behalf of what certain witnesses and authors of propaganda refer to as socialized medicine.

"Other evidence before the committee reveals that the Bureau of Research and Statistics of the Social Security Board also prepare pamphlets and propaganda material to be distributed under the imprint of the CIO."

Aid Program Held Sea Union Subsidy

Testifies Here

Thomas Sees Arms Plan Causing War

Norman Thomas, veteran Socialist leader, yesterday declared that President Truman's inter-American arms cooperation plan, would "foment discord, stir up wars" and "strengthen dictators."

He appeared before the House Foreign Affairs Committee in opposition to legislation authorizing the United States to help arm and train other American armies, navies and air forces so as to standardize the defense forces of the Western Hemisphere.

Thomas declared the real purpose of the measure is to "build a western hemisphere bloc against the Russian bloc which the Soviet dictatorship has been building."

Sees Stalin Pleased

Stalin, he declared, undoubtedly "contemplates the bill with satisfaction," because it will provide Communists with material for anti-American propaganda.

"The United States," Thomas said, "will be—or will seem to be in the eyes of the plain people of Latin America— the ally and support of dictators, and the source of an ever-increasing burden of taxation for the purpose of buying bombers and battleships when the people need bread."

Chances are 10 to 1, he stated, that the arms will be used to "put down popular uprisings" rather than against a non-American invader.

Frederick J. Libby, executive secretary of the National Council for Prevention of War, urged the committee to disapprove the arms program and instead apply the "Marshall plan" for aiding Europe to Latin America.

"Latin-America needs higher living standards more than it does armaments," he declared. "Without higher living standards, it will drift towards communism regardless of the repressive measures which our military equipment will enable the dictators to employ."

Fears More "Somozas"

Attacking the administration program, Miss Heloise Brainerd of the Women's International League for Peace and Freedom, said the plan to train Latin-American military leaders will produce more dictators like "Somoza of Nicaragua."

Ernest Galarza, former labor information chief of the Pan American Union, opposed the bill on behalf of the Friends Committee on National Legislation. He said it would weaken poor countries and strengthen wealthy ones.

Esther J. Crooks, a Baltimore school teacher, urged that in lieu of building a hemisphere defense force to protect the Panama Canal, we internationalize it and share in a world police force to guard it.

Louis Wier, member of the Peoples Mandate Committee, said the arms program would strengthen dictators and arouse jealousies.

House Subcommittee Says Workers Get $500,000,000 a Year

By The Associated Press

A House Foreign Affairs Subcommittee has drafted a report asserting that maritime unions are getting what amounts to a 500 million dollars a year subsidy under the Administration's foreign aid program.

The report was submitted yesterday to the full committee and subcommittee members said they expected it to be made public within a few days.

Asking not to be quoted by name, some of the members said the subcommittee concluded after a study that the aid program was undertaken without full knowledge of economic factors involved. Specifically, they contended:

1. About one billion dollars of the program goes annually for shipping costs, and the maritime workers get about half of that. This amounts, the subcommittee argues, to a "subsidy" for the unions.

Would Release Ships

In this connection, the subcommittee is reported to have recommended turning over idle Liberty ships to foreign countries and letting them handle the cargoes with lower-paid seamen.

2. This country is getting nothing substantial in return for materials shipped abroad because, as one member put it, "no one in the Administration seems to know what the other countries have in the way of things we actually need."

3. The program seems to have been "pulled out of the air" without first determining the country's ability to provide large-scale aid.

One member said the subcommittee's studies showed "a complete lack of cooperation" between Congress and the State Department.

Kept in Dark, He Says

In fact, he added, "there appears to have been a studied plan to keep the House in the dark" about many aspects of the program.

He said that the group had got information from various Federal agencies, but had difficulty obtaining data from the State Department until President Truman recently announced plans for a similar survey of the foreign-aid program.

The subcommittee members are Representatives Vorys, R., Ohio), chairman; Fulton (R., Pa.), Javits (R., N. Y.), Colmer (D., Miss.) and Richards (D., S. C.).

Meanwhile, William E. Warne, newly inducted Assistant Secretary of the Interior, said yesterday an initial report on the Nation's resources in the light of global needs may be ready within a month.

Survey Asked by Truman

President Truman on June 22 asked Secretary of the Interior Krug to conduct such a survey. Krug assigned the task to Warne, who told reporters the resources survey requested by Mr. Truman involves agencies of the Interior, Agriculture and Commerce Departments and, for consultation purposes, experts from the State Department, the National Economic Council and the White House.

"We can't afford to wait for the State Department to determine the need in Europe and elsewhere throughout the world for American materials," Warne said.

"We must try to anticipate that demand and to measure our resources against it. We are surveying the whole situation once over lightly, and will base our initial report upon those findings."

Warne said the study would include some 60 of the most critical materials, products and commodities, in 10 or 12 groups. Fertilizers, food, fibers, machinery and transportation are some of the major subjects under study.

A second study to determine the probable impact of foreign needs on the domestic economy is being made by the President's Council of Economic Advisers.

'Real Income' Index Reported in Slump

Minneapolis, Minn., July 2 (AP). Investors Syndicate said today its monthly survey indicated "real income" had taken a sharp drop "for the first time in many months."

The investment company said that although the average family income today is $1.18 for every $1 earned a year ago, prices have gone up to $1.23 for every $1.

Ramadier Charge Irks Rightists

Paris, July 2 (U.P.).—The National Assembly was suspended in an uproar tonight after Premier Ramadier charged that the right wing deputies tended to follow the same line of action as the extreme rightish Black Maquis accused of plotting to overthrow the republic.

Over the shouts of the rightists, Ramadier said he did not mean that any assemblymen were plotters, but he added:

"I said that behind certain agitations there are conspirators who, in the shelter of certain formulas, organized themselves into groups which want to take up arms against the republic."

General Abruptly Relieved

Paris, July 2 (AP).—The French cabinet today abruptly relieved Gen. Eduard de Larminat, wartime chief of staff to Gen. Charles de Gaulle, of his duties as inspector general of colonial troops.

The action was taken at a meeting to discuss ramifications of a purported "Black Maquis" plot to overthrow the Fourth Republic.

Surete police, meanwhile, intensified their hunt for a 26-year-old French count, accused of conspiring to bring into the plot Nazis and Fascists now in Italy and Spain. A warrant identified the count as Herouet de Mervelle.

Reports persisted that police had found four sizable and rival "Maquis" in the last six months, and that the organizations were known as the blue, black, white and red groups.

The semiofficial French Press Agency quoted a cabinet spokesman, Pierre Bourdan, as saying he could neither confirm nor deny that De Larminat's arrest was related "to the investigation resulting from the discovery of the anti-Republican plot. There is more to it than the discovery of arms dumps."

A retired general and former resistance leader, Jean Casimir Mercon, was being questioned in connection with the alleged plot, which the government said was hatched by right-wing forces.

De Larminat was recalled in the midst of an official inspection tour of the Cameroons. The press agency said the action caused "some sensation among political observers."

Ban on DPs Would Hurt U. S. Prestige Abroad, Lehman Says

Failure of the United States to lead in assisting resettlement of European refugees will be interpreted abroad as meaning Americans do not "practice the principles they preach," Herbert Lehman said yesterday.

The former New York Governor and former UNRRA director general told a House Judiciary subcommittee it should approve legislation to admit 400,000 displaced Europeans to this country over a four-year period. The number proposed, he said, was "so small in proportion to our total population that it cannot create any serious unemployment problem."

A detailed study of conditions in displaced persons camps was presented by Lieut. Col. Henry M. Sage, chief of the field contact section of the Army's European command.

"The DPs are actively indoctrinated against any form of Nazism or fascism," Sage said. "As for communism, the very fact that they are ready to accept any fate rather than be sent back to Communist-dominated countries shows their attitude toward 'isms.'"

Boys' Drive Nets $18,500

The campaign of the Prince Georges County Boys Clubs which ended Monday netted $18,500, with a few units still unreported, Club President Louis B. Arnold announced yesterday. Unreported collections should carry the total over $20,000, Arnold estimated. The goal was $25,000.

Arnold praised the efforts of Campaign Chairman J. C. Lewis, Zone Chairmen Smith H. Purdum and Earl Zulick and the volunteer collectors in raising the funds.

GOP Senators Ignore Pleas For 'Voice' Bill

The Republican leadership in Congress yesterday ignored a new warning by Secretary of State Marshall that failure to act this session on the Mundt bill will place "serious handicaps" on carrying out United States foreign policy.

After a joint Senate-House program-planning meeting of GOP leaders, Senator Robert A. Taft (R., Ohio) told reporters the purpose of the Mundt bill to give permanent status to this nation's foreign information service had not even been discussed.

Meanwhile, Senate-House conferees on the State Department appropriation bill yesterday approved a total fund of $12,470,000 to carry on the United States information service throughout the world. The sum is nearly four million dollars short of the 16 million dollars which Secretary Marshall said was the bedrock figure with which the program could be carried on.

The House had appropriated no funds for the program, and Senate conferees were forced to lop one million dollars from the $13,470,000 the Senate had voted. The sum includes $6,857,000 for the "Voice of America" broadcasts through Russia's iron curtain.

The Secretary's most recent plea for congressional action during the next four weeks was delivered before a subcommittee of the Senate Foreign Relations committee which started hearings on the Mundt bill yesterday.

Senator H. Alexander Smith (R., N. J.), subcommittee chairman, said he believed the committee would report the bill and get it on the calendar this session, but he indicated there was little hope the measure would get the green light from the Senate leadership.

The measure has already passed the House by a three to one vote.

Smith disclosed that John Foster Dulles, Republican foreign policy spokesman, has added his personal plea for action during this session also.

Dulles expressed the hope that the Congress would not take a "short-sighted view of the situation" at a time when the gross misrepresentations of this country by Soviet Russia "theaten to isolate us in the world."

Without mentioning any specific country, Marshall declared that, "The facts about the United States are withheld or falsified and our motives are distorted."

The United States must make the peoples of other nations understand its peaceful intentions and its motives, the Secretary declared.

The Senate appropriation for the information program, "will certainly not enable this department to carry on the information activities at a level which our embassies abroad consider essential," Marshall declared.

of the Waves, said it is not planned to recruit the Waves to the proposed strength of 1000 officers and 10,000 enlisted personnel at once. Perhaps initially, about 500 officers and 2000 enlisted women—present strength—will be appointed in the Regular Navy, with annual increments of 1000 thereafter, she stated.

A Marine Corps representative said that Marine Headquarters had no definite plans for women as yet. He indicated that the number taken probably would be far short of the 200 officers anad 2000 enlisted personnel authorized. There are now only 180 Women Marines.

All three services, however, plan large women reserves. Under present law all three services must be disbanded six months after the end of the war.

Army and Navy representatives said that marriage would not be a barrier to appointment or continuation in service. Women with minor children, however, will not be accepted, and pregnancy will be cause for discharge.

Official Text Of Statement By Molotov

Paris, July 2 (AP).—Following is the text of the statement made by Russian Foreign Minister Molotov, as issued in English today by Soviet Embassy attaches:

THE Soviet delegation has carefully examined the proposal submitted by the French delegation on July 1.

The French draft as well as the previous proposal of the British delegation sets the task of drawing up an economic program for the whole of Europe, even though the majority of European countries are known to have no nation-wide economic programs of their own. With a view to elaborating such a comprehensive European program it is proposed to set up a special organization charged with assessing the resources and needs of European countries and even with determining the development of the main branches of industry of these countries and only after that with ascertaining the possibilities of receiving American economic aid.

Therefore, the question of American economic aid of which indeed nothing definite is yet known has now provided an occasion for the British and French governments to seek the creation of a new organization standing over and above the countries of Europe and interfering in their internal affairs down to determining the line of development to be followed by the main branches of industry in these countries. Furthermore, Great Britain and France, together with the countries close to them, are laying claim to a predominant position in this organization or in the so-called "steering committee" for Europe as it has been named in the British draft.

Verbal reservations are now being made to the effect that this organization would allegedly not intervene in the internal affairs of these states and would not encroach upon their sovereignty. But it clearly follows from the tasks which are being set before this organization or before the "steering" committee that the European countries would find themselves placed under control and would lose their former economic and national independence because it so pleases certain strong powers.

In any case it is now suggested that the possibility of American aid being received by this or that country involves an obedient attitude on its part visa vis the above-mentioned organization and its "steering committee."

Where is this likely to lead?

TODAY pressure might be put on Poland to produce more coal even though it be at the expense of the other branches of Polish industry because that is in the interest of certain European countries; tomorrow it will be said that Czechoslovakia must be required to increase her agricultural production and to reduce her engineering industry and it will be proposed that Czechoslovakia should receive machinery from other European countries wishing to sell goods at higher prices.

Or, as the newspapers recently reported, Norway will be compelled to discontinue the development of her steel industry because that is more convenient to certain foreign steel corporations, etc.

What would then remain of the economic independence and sovereignty of such European countries?

Under these conditions how would the small countries and in general the less powerful states be able to safeguard their national economies and independence?

The Soviet government certainly cannot venture along this path and continue to support its proposals put forth at this conference June 30. Nor does the Soviet government share the enthusiasm regarding foreign support made apparent in the last French draft.

When efforts are directed towards Europe helping herself in the first place and developing her economic potentialities as well as the exchange of goods between countries, such efforts are in conformity with the interests of the countries of Europe. When, however, it is stated as in the French proposal that the decisive hold on the rehabilitation of the economic life of European countries should belong to the United States and not to the European countries themselves, such a position stands in contradiction to the interests of European countries since it might lead to a denial of their economic independence, which denial is incompatible with national sovereignty.

The Soviet delegation believes that internal measures and the national efforts of each country should have a decisive importance for the countries of Europe and not make calculations for foreign support which should be of secondary importance. The Soviet Union has always counted above all on its own powers and is known to be on a steady way of progress of its economic life.

THERE exist two forms of international cooperation.

The first form of cooperation is based on the development of political and economic relations between states possessing equal rights and in that case their national sovereignty does not suffer from foreign interference.

Such is the democratic basis for international cooperation which brings nations closer together and facilitates the task of their mutual aid.

There exists, however, a different form of international cooperation based on the predominant position of one or several strong powers in relation to other countries which slip into the position of subordinated countries deprived of their independence.

It is perfectly obvious that the first form of cooperation between states when they act as parties possessing equal rights is radically different from the second form of international cooperation, when this principle is not observed.

The Soviet Government, while favoring the development of international collaboration on the basis of equal rights and mutual respect for the interests of the contracting parties, cannot lend its assistance to anyone in arranging his affairs at the expense of other countries of less strength or size because this has nothing in common with normal cooperation between states.

The Soviet Government considering that the Anglo-French plan to set up a special organization for the coordination of the economies of European States would lead to interference in the internal affairs of European countries, particularly those which have the greatest need for outside aid, and believing that this can only complicate relations between the countries of Europe and Hamper their cooperation, rejects this plan as being altogether unsatisfactory and incapable of yielding any positive results.

On the other hand the Soviet Union favors the fullest development of economic collaboration between European and other countries on a healthy basis of equality and mutual respect for national interests and has itself constantly contributed and will contribute to this end by the expansion of trade with other countries.

THE fact that the Franco-British proposals raise the question of Germany and her resources merits special attention. It is proposed that the above-mentioned organization or the "steering committee" should also deal with the utilization of German resources although it is generally known that the justified reparation claims of those Allied countries which had suffered from German aggression still remain to be met.

Therefore, not only is no special concern being shown for those countries which had made the greatest sacrifices during the war as well as important contributions to Allied victory but indeed it is at their expense that it is proposed to direct the resources of Germany for purposes other than reparations.

On the other hand nothing is being done to expedite the setting up of an all-German government which would be qualified to take care of the needs of the German people better than anyone else.

On the contrary the policy of federalizing Germany is still being carried out in the western zones of Germany as well as the line of action directed towards a still great separation of western German territories from the rest of Germany, a fact which is incompatible with the genuine restoration of Germany as a united democratic state forming part of the European family of peace-loving states.

WHAT would the implementation of the Franco-British proposal concerning the setting up of a special organization or of a "steering committee" for the elaboration of a comprehensive European economic program lead to?

It would lead to no good results.

It would lead to Great Britain, France and that group of countries which follows them separating themselves from the other European states and thus dividing Europe into two groups of states and creating new difficulties in the relations between them.

In that case American credits would serve not to facilitate the economic rehabilitation of Europe but to make use of some European countries against other European countries in whatever way certain strong powers seeking to establish their domination should find it profitable to do so.

The Soviet government considers it necessary to caution the governments of Great Britain and of France against the consequences of such action which would be directed not towards the unification of the efforts of the countries of Europe in the task of their economic rehabilitation after the war, but would lead to opposite results, which have nothing in common with the real interests of the peoples of Europe.

Bevin's Reply To Molotov's Aid Statement

By The Associated Press

The summary of British Foreign Secretary Bevin's statement in Paris:

Mr. Molotov's objections to the Franco-British program were based on a complete travesty of the facts and a complete misrepresentation of everything the British government had submitted. I suppose the method is to go on repeating those misrepresentations in the hope that someone would at last believe them. The British documents would speak for themselves.

It is a fundamental principle by which we work not to interfere in the internal affairs of other countries and we hope the national sovereignty of European powers will be recognized and respected equally by everyone while this attempt is being made to achieve economic cooperation.

From the beginning I have seen in the Marshall proposal a way to secure quickly the rehabilitation and independence of Europe—not a way to undermine it; to make Europe free—not to provide for the domination of any one state.

When this meeting began I had hoped that all three of us would be able jointly to give Europe a lead, to cooperate in finding a way to put the continent on its feet again.

That has not proved to be the case.

But Britain will continue to strive for the unity of Europe, for the independence of Europe and for the independence of its national units.

I regret that Mr. Molotov has threatened that if we continued this beneficent work we must face grave consequences.

Well, my country has faced grave consequences and threats before. It is not the sort of prospect which will deter us from doing what we consider our duty.

Nevertheless, I profundly regret that threat.

Our policy is to dominate none and to cooperate with everyone. We shall work as closely as we can with the United Nations organization and inform it and its various bodies and all the governments of what we are doing.

If there are governments which will not cooperate, then we should at least have discharged our duty by trying to help them.

I regret that in the course of the meting, suspicions have been expressed of Britain's intentions. By our action we will prove these to have been unjustified and in the end, perhaps by example, we may win when by agreement we can't.

Daughter-in-Law of Wagner Sentenced as 'Activist' Nazi

Bayreuth, Germany, July 2 (U.P.). A German tribunal today found Frau Winifred Wagner, British-born daughter-in-law of Composer Richard Wagner and once Adolph Hitler's reputed choice for a wife, guilty of being an "activist" Nazi.

Frau Wagner

She was sentenced to 450 days of hard labor and public work; 60 per cent of her property was ordered confiscated, and she was forbidden to hold public office or join a political party or a union for the next five years.

Court official said the "hard labor" would be "clerical or some similar type of work."

Frau Wagner, who is 50 and the widow of Richard Wagner's son, Siegfried, was charged with turning the Wagner music festivals at Bayreuth into a "mecca for Nazi Party propaganda."

Frau Wagner took the verdict calmly. She said that under German law, she was only the custodian of the property, which includes memoirs of her father-in-law's works. Her husband's will, she said, left everything to their children.

Statement of Bidault in Reply To Molotov Declaration on Aid

By The Associated Press

The summary of French Foreign Minister Bidault's statement in Paris:

I have heard with much interest, and also with some disappointment the declaration of Mr. Molotov. His conclusion puts my country on guard. I would like for my part to put the Soviet delegation on guard against any action which might result in separating Europe into two groups.

So far as it is concerned, the French government rejects every suspicion of hegemony. The interest of European peoples is to be united and not to be divided. The universe is witness that France has done all she can to prevent such a division, and she solemnly declines all responsibility for the consequence of a decision which she has done her utmost to avert.

I would like to present some observations on the criticisms which have been made against the last proposal of the French government. Several times it was mentioned that it was in effect a program imposing certain restraints on various European nations.

I recall, once again, that what we want to ask of European nations is a balance sheet and that their independence be entirely preserved. National statistics ought to be added up and compared in a manner to determine their resources and their needs.

In this procedure there is not a shadow of suspicion of restraint imposed upon Europe. As to the organization which ought to attempt to establish this balance sheet it will operate without force and according to facts which will be furnished to it.

It has been mentioned that American aid was uncertain. It will be even more uncertain if the facts of the problem are not respected and if Europe does not speak up to say—I repeat this for at least the fourth time—what she can do for herself and what we as a whole are lacking.

They tell us: This is a pretext to interfere in the internal affairs of other peoples. I have declared several times, I have even put it in writing, that it is not a question of fixing directives by way of authority. It is simply a question of knowing the production and objectives of these various countries and of harmonizing them in complete liberty.

Neither England, I am sure, nor France in any case, I affirm, seeks a dominating place in such an organization. But we have learned from the experience of existing international organizations that the role of great powers cannot be underestimated. This is why we have thought, as is normal in every other case, that it was their duty to take the initiative.

Consequently there were not only verbal reserves as to non-interference in internal affairs and as to guarantees of the individual sovereignty of states, but clear and categorical commitment. There can be no question of controlled countries which would be subjected to the pleasure of some great powers. Acceptance of European countries is not conditioned on their obedience but on their independent acceptance.

They will participate if they so desire and my information is that a great number of them wish to participate. Their benevolent cooperation will be very welcome. Naturally no cooperation other than benevolent cooperation can be accepted.

All hypotheses which have been put forth by Molotov—one for example that Poland would be obliged to concentrate on coal to the detriment of other industries, that Czechoslovakia would be obliged to abandon certain industries in which she excels in favor of development of her agriculture, that Norway would have to reduce her steel production—none of these can be upheld.

We are well qualified to say that no plan concerning any one of these countries has ever been in the mind of the French delegation.

These three countries need help. All that would be asked of them is what they be capable of providing from their side to Europe in exchange for possible aid which would come first of all from other European countries and later from America.

They have more facts about their economic condition than we have and we ask them to furnish them in view of establishing an overall balance sheet.

What then remains of the independence of European states? That is question which has been posed. There remains exactly all of it. I have never been able to understand that collaboration of states can be achieved only at expense of their independence. Cooperation among states, neighbors or distant, is carried on with respect for mutual independence, and collaboration which does not respect that independence is without value.

It is consequently in independence and for independence that their cooperation is sought. . . . It is a question in the first place of the individual effort of each state which nothing can replace. Each state ought do the utmost possible with the means which the destruction of war has left to it to reconstruct itself.

Then, upon this continent of limited extent, we must organize an effort of indispensable mutual assistance to coordinate our means in friendship and within this maintain independence.

Finally, in a temporary manner, it is fitting to turn ourselves to another continent which emerged from the war unscathed and whose resources are immense, to aid countries which suffered horribly, because they were first to endure the horror.

I realize that a term has been placed in the French delegation's proposal—the words "decisive role" of American aid, which I must explain here. "Decisive role" does not signify the principal role.

Since around this table we former companions in combat—even sometimes of combat among ourselves—I might recall that in French victory and in French defeat at Marengo, at Waterloo, the decisive role was played by several thousand men who arrived at the last moment. It was the decisive role but it was not the principal role.

As to the principal role we will assume it, each of us, all us together, I hope, while the decisive role for several months to come we hope will be played by the United States.

The United States is the several thousand men who will decide the battle and win the victory against misery.

So far as Germany is concerned I want to say again what I had to say yesterday. The position of the French government is not changed on the question of reparations. The only reference to it in the French proposal provides for consultation by the commanders in chief.

As for countries which suffered from the war which were victims of Hitlerian aggression I have myself mentioned, in a spirit of sympathy for the Soviet proposition, the possibility of setting up all priorities possible.

I now see reappearing, it is true, the idea of a unified government for Germany to which, as is well-known, the French government is not at all favorable, at least not today. I want to recall that this matter cannot be the object of three-sided deliberation. Thus all points concerning Germany, it seems to me, were answered yesterday. I do not want to embark upon useless repetition.

The French proposition does not intend to enchain the economies of smaller countries but on the contrary to liberate them.

The day when we have modernized our economy, when we are able to pay for our essential purchases with our own sales of our own products with our own means, then we shall be truly independent. Independence is not achieved in misery and isolation but affirmed in human cooperation and prosperity.

portant because of Poland's coal mines and Czechoslovakia's industries.

Will the Russians let these Communist-led governments take part in European reconstruction? Will the Poles and the Czechs dare to come in against Russia's wishes, if Russia should try to forbid them? And would Russia attempt to repeat her Hungarian tactics in Poland or Czechoslovakia if either or both should defy her?

These are some of the questions being asked here, without any possibility of confident answers as yet.

The second situation that will be watched anxiously here is the tactics of the Communist parties inside France and Italy and, to a lesser extent, other western European countries.

It would be normal and wholly in line with precedent for the French and Italian Communists to begin open pressure to delay, obstruct or otherwise hamstring the progress of an European reconstruction program. In France and Italy, the Communists are now outside the Government, and could cause a good deal of havoc by strikes or other signs of their displeasure.

Statement Embarrassing

However, the Molotov statement yesterday is one of the most embarrassing he has ever made, from the standpoint of the western Communists. If French Communists are ordered to oppose the Marshall program, in line with what Molotov said, they will expose themselves to the charge that they prefer the dictates of Moscow to the economic recovery of France.

It will not be an easy position for them, especially in view of the fact that four out of the five million Frenchmen who voted for Communist deputies at the last election are not members of the Communist Party.

The question being asked here, therefore, is whether the Communists in France and Italy will be ordered to oppose the Marshall program openly, or whether they will get permission from Moscow to approve it and work against it under cover. After all, western Communist parties have had special dispensations from Moscow before; they have occasionally had special permission to support a program that Moscow opposes.

As to British and French determination to go ahead with the Marshall program, there is no doubt here now. Both Foreign Secretary Bevin and Foreign Minister Bidault stood up to a direct threat from Molotov yesterday, and did it without flinching.

Much For U. S. to Do

There will be much for the United States to do on its own in coming weeks: to get Ruhr coal production into its stride again, to raise the permitted levels of industrial production in western Germany, to assess American capabilities and to work out the priorities needed here for getting the reconstruction goods to Europe. There is also the immense problem, which nobody in high office forgets, of planning the stategy of presenting the program to Congress, perhaps in a special session to be called for October.

For the present, however, the United States is content to leave matters in the hands of Bevin and Bidault. The Paris conference ended in such a way that the whole enterprise is now safeguarded against whatever Soviet propaganda may do to torpedo it.

As one informed observer said yesterday: "If George Marshall doesn't do another thing as Secretary of State, his plan has at least forced the Russians to show where they stand and what they stand for."

Britain Called Pessimistic on U. S. Aid Plan

London, July 2 (AP).—A high government source said today that Downing Street was extremely pessimistic despite plans of Britain and France to go ahead without Russia on the American program of economic aid to Europe.

This source frankly admitted the possibility that an effective program for continental recovery might easily fail without the support of Russia and the Soviet-orbit countries.

As a result, he said, Britain was ready to slash "really drastically" her entire overseas buying program if the plan of U. S. Secretary of State George C. Marshall fell through.

Shortly before the breakup of the Paris meeting, Deputy Prime Minister Herbert Morrison said that the entire burden of world reconstruction could not "be placed on Uncle Sam."

He warned of a world-wide depression unless world trade was expanded and said the Marshall offer has shown that the United States government is "alive to the facts."

"But if anyone gets into the habit of thinking all we have to do is to send the bill to the United States he is wrong," Morrison declared. He added that there must be a joint effort of all concerned.

Morrison said the Labor Government was preparing to launch a three-year or five-year plan to carry the country through its post-war economic crisis, and that members of a planning board would be named early next week to draft the long-term program.

Morrison, noting the lack of dollars might further cut imports, said Britain's "economic position is fundamentally sound," although the British "in common with the rest of the world are going through a very dark and difficulty patch."

British Coal Picture Brightens

London, July 2 (U.P.).—British coal output—despite the complete breakdown of production in February—will fall only five million tons short o fthe 1947 goal set by government planners, a high government source said today.

Describing the situation as "better than had appeared," he predicted coal output would reach 195 million tons by year's end. The government set the goal at 200 million tons.

60% Veterans Seeking Training Are Placed

More than 60 per cent of the World War II veterans who have applied for education or job-training benefits had entered training by July 1, according to the Veterans' Administration.

Of the 3,935,000 who began training under the GI Bill and the Vocational Rehabilitation Act, more than 35 per cent have terminated the studies they began, although most of them are still eligible for further study.

The first law school in America was established in Litchfield, Conn., in 1782 by Tapping Reeve, but closed after similar schools were opened by Harvard, Yale, Virginia and Columbia.

French against trying to pursue the question further, Molotov said:

"In that case American credits would serve not to facilitate the economic rehabilitation of Europe but to make use of some European countries against other European countries in whatever way certain strong powers seeking to establish their domination should find it profitable to do so."

Molotov declared Norway, Poland, and Czechoslovakia would have to scrap individual recovery plans and to do what other powers wanted.

[According to information reaching Washington, these three countries have been most anxious to participate under the Marshall program, and some reports stated that they had been beseeching Moscow for permission to join.—Editor's note.]

Molotov also struck out at two other faults which he said the plan contained.

The first, he said, was that Britain and France would form a dominant group within the proposed committee.

The second was that no attempt had been made to set up an all-German government, that even further divisions of western Germany were being contemplated, and that in proposing to use German reparations "for purposes other than reparations" the plan showed "no special concern for those countries which had made the greatest sacrifices during the war as well as important contributions to Allied victory."

Bidault, in his reply, declared that "true independence cannot be built upon misery and hunger, but must be affirmed in human co-operation and prosperity."

Bevin said that if some agree to collaborate on reconstruction, "perhaps we can dispel some of these accusations by example since we are unable to do so by arguments."

Bidault declared the program should include three essential steps:

1. Individual national effort of participating countries.
2. Mutual aid among European countries.
3. American aid to make up the balance, as temporary assistance.

In Geneva United States Undersecretary of State William L. Clayton told a news conference Marshall's offer could be carried out even though some European countries refused to participate.

Lake Success, N. Y., July 2 (INS). — Secretary-General Trygve Lie of the United Nations expressed regret tonight that the three-power economic conference in Paris has ended but said he could not believe "the last word" has been said on the subject.

He announced at a news conference that the secretariat of the U. N. will hold itself in readiness to take any action in connection with the Marshall plan that members of the United Nations may consider to be helpful.

Same at Any Age

GREENSBURG, Pa. (U.P.) — Marital trouble knows no age. The county probation office jailed a 16-year-old husband for failing to support his wife, 15. A few days earlier, a 75-year-old husband was committed for failing to support his wife, 71.

32 Filipino Convicts Routed After Seizing City, Governor

Manila, July 2 (AP).—Military police today routed 32 escaped convicts who had seized and held Calapan, capital of Mindoro Island, for several hours.

They had captured M. P. arms and uniforms and disarmed police. The Governor, a Congressman and other officials.

Three of the fugitives, including their leader, were killed and 10 were captured. Nineteen escaped under fire. The desperado was a Lieutenant Romeo, a former M. P. officer who was serving 16 years for rape.

Gov. Conrado Morente, one of the disarmed but unharmed officials, himself notified President Roxas at Malacanan Palace, Manila, of Calapan's liberation after a terror-filled night and morning.

The other disarmed officials were Representative Raul Leuterio, floor leader in the Filipino House of Representatives, Mayor Filomeno Sumaco of Calapan, and the chief of police.

Taking advantage of the absence of most of Calapan's M. P. forces—who were hunting Japanese stragglers on nearby Lubang Island—the convicts struck last night. They disarmed Calapan's municipal police and a platoon of military police, seized their weapons and uniforms, and imprisoned them in the stockade from which the convicts just had escaped.

They methodically seized all forms of communications—including radio stations at the airfield and radio operators aboard ships in Calapan Harbor—and isolated the town.

A Philippine air line pilot, Capt. Manuel Conde, helped effect the town's liberation.

He landed at Calapan at 11:15 a. m. and quickly was captured, along with his copilot, by a heavily armed man in a M. P. uniform.

A few minutes later Conde heard heavy gunfire and dropped prone on the floor of Romero's headquarters. Romero was killed. After 45 minutes, the firing ceased. Romero's followers retreated.

Learning that M. P.'s from neighboring towns had recaptured the airstrip, Conde flew to Manila, 80 miles to the north, to notify Brig. Gen. Mariano Casteneda, chief of military police.

Heavy reinforcements were flown to Mindoro to free the town and to pursue the surviving fugitives.

Congress Asked For GAO Building

Congress was asked yesterday to authorize $22,850,000 for a new General Accounting Office Building in the block bounded by 4th, 5th, G and H sts. nw.

The plan was presented in a new House bill by Public Works Committee Chairman George A. Dondero (R., Mich.).

An earlier bill left the plan without a limit on the cost of the proposed building. Under the new bill, money already on hand for the GAO building, about 5 million dollars, could be used, but appropriations for additional sums to finish the project could not be made for use before the fiscal year starting July 1, 1949.

Barrett's Order on Holding Crime Reports

The text of Barrett's order follows:

July 2, 1947—Memorandum
Order to the Force
Subject: "Holding" reports

The purpose of this order is to clarify for the benefit of all members of the Police Department existing unwritten policy with respect to the holding of reports of crimes and alleged crimes.

All complaints of crimes coming to the attention of any member of the Metropolitan Police Department shall be recorded at once in the proper record book in the precinct or bureau having jurisdiction over the offense, or the place where the offense occurred, in accordance with existing regulations. The report of such offense shall be transmitted on the police teletype system.

Reports may be held in the following circumstances:

1. Where there is reasonable doubt on the part of the investigating officer that a crime, in fact, occurred.

2. Where public disclosure of the complaint would subject a person, of previous good character, to public humiliation and disgrace.

3. Where disclosure of the crime would tend to impede orderly investigation and the ultimate apprehension of the criminal.

Under any of the foregoing exceptions the investigating officer must obtain the permission of his immediate superior to place the complaint in the "hold" classification.

Under no circumstances shall any complaint be "held" for a period of longer than 30 days from the date of the commission of the offense without the written approval of the commanding officer of the precinct or bureau, and for reasons given in writing by the investigating officer.

Cases may be "held" permanently only for reasons given in writing and with the approval of the commanding officer of the precinct or bureau.

This order supersedes all prior orders issued with respect to the same subject matter. If there is any conflict betwen this order and prior orders, then this order shall govern.

(Signed) Robert J. Barrett,
Major and Superintendent.

Barrett Order Reverses Stand

sons for holding it longer are to be given in writing.

However, he permitted holding of complaints "permanently only for reasons given in writing and the approval of the commanding officer of the precinct or bureau."

"Doubt" a Factor

Barrett permitted cases to be "held" if there is a "reasonable doubt" that the crime was actually committed. No mention was made about reporting such crime complaints to the statistical bureau at the Central Bureau and then reporting the complaint "cleared" in the same manner when the case is proved a "phoney."

The second classification permitteed to be held by Barrett was in complaints where a person "of previous good character" would be subjected to "public humiliation and disgrace," according to yesterday's order.

Barrett didn't explain why it was necessary to keep this category out of crime statistics, nor why it was necessary to prevent other policemen from knowing about the crime and aiding in the criminal's apprehension by reporting it on the teletype.

The Post's investigation uncovered more than 600 robbery complaints which had been marked hold at precincts during the first 11 months of the 1946-47 fiscal year or had been "pocketed" in secret Detective Bureau files. They had never been reported in the statistical bureau which officially recorded only 761 cases and ignored the 600 additional marked "hold."

Third Classification

The third classification of "hold" cases permitted by Barrett was to help detectives in apprehending criminals. This was similar to the only exception made by Detective Chief Truscott.

Shortly after Barrett was sworn in as police superintendent Tuesday, he announced he was passing the entire problem over to his new chief of detectives, Truscott. Truscott took immediate remedial action but it apparently did not meet with approval of Barrett.

Barrett specifically declared: "This order supersedes all prior orders issued." The only other written order was the one given to the Detective Bureau by Truscott. Up to that time pocketing cases had been an "unwritten policy," Barrett acknowledged in his order.

He told a Post reporter Tuesday he wanted to start his new administration "with a clean slate."

'Happy They Were Exposed'

"I admit that there have been abuses and I am happy that they were exposed before I took office," he said. This statement was made after The Post showed him eight cases not mentioned in previous articles, and which had not been reported on the police teletype or in statistics, which the Detective Bureau under his supervision had buried in secret files.

Barrett added also on Tuesday: "I have ordered all police officials verbally to stop this practice of holding cases immediately, unless there are extraordinary circumstances. I will put this order out through regular channels at 10 o'clock in the morning."

Yesterday's order followed.

Called 'Public Service'

The Washington Criminal Justice Association declared after it's meeting:

"It is the consensus of the (executive) committee that The Post rendered a real public service to the community and to those charged with the administration of law enforcement by revealing inadequacies in the methods of crime reporting.

"The condition warrants immediate change and complete correction. The community is entitled to assurance that police statistics hereafter will be accurate and that the existent condition is completely corrected."

The association declared it preferred to work "cooperatively with the police in order to obtain the most efficient protection possible for the citizens of the District of Columbia."

Calls for Accurate Research

"The public is entitled to know the valid facts concerning crime within the District of Columbia," the committee added. "The best interests of the police, the public and the association are served by accurate research to provide the basis for thorough planning.

"If the association can be of service to provide this perspective, its facilities are available to public agencies. If the method of reporting and tabulating information concerning crime in Washington is not valid as would seem to be indicated, the association will be glad to cooperate with the Metropolitan Police Department in order to provide a truer perspective."

Those present for the meeting included John A. Remon, vice president of the Chesapeake & Potomac Telephone Co., Vincent Caccardi, district manager for the Metropolitan Life Insurance Co., Charles B. Dulcan, executive vice president of the Hecht Co., Fontaine Bradley, attorney, John J. Corson, circulation director of The Post, Judge James A. Cobb and others.

RICHARD ROBERTS

Associated Press WIREPHOTOS
MRS. RUTH CASTENDYK

Roberts, a Berkeley, Calif., chemist and son-in-law of Mr. and Mrs. Alfred Wesley Ingalls, testified yesterday in San Diego that Dora Jones, maid, served the Ingalls for years without pay. Mrs. Castendyk, of Chicago, Mrs. Ingalls' daughter by a previous marriage, also took the stand in the Federal court "slavery" trial of the New England couple

Ingalls' Kin Thought Dora Was 'Criminal'

San Diego, July 2 (AP).—A daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Alfred Wesley Ingalls testified today that she recalled from earliest childhood her mother saying their Negro maid, Dora Jones, was "a criminal who had been paroled to my mother."

Mrs. Richard Roberts of Berkeley, Calif., who was to be followed on the stand by Mrs. Ruth Castendyk of Chicago, Mrs. Ingall's daughter by her first marriage, added:

"I never was told what the crime was."

Mrs. Ingalls Sobs

The Federal prosecutor charges the Ingallses reduced Dora, now 58, to slavery by years of drudgery and threats of jail because of an alleged affair with Mrs. Ingalls' first husband, Walter Harmon, of Washington, D. C.

Mrs. Ingalls, 62-year-old descendant of Colonial Governor Bradford of Massachusetts, buried her face in her handkerchief and her shoulders shook with sobs as her younger daughter took the stand.

Tears came to her eyes again when the witness testified that, after she and her husband had attempted "to free" Dora in Berkeley last year, she telephoned her mother and—

"Told her I loved her. That the fact I had caused Dora to leave her wouldn't make any difference between us. That she should let Dora lead her own life."

Son-in-Law Testifies

Mrs. Ingalls replied, the daughter said, "that was impossible" and accused her of kidnaping Dora. Mrs. Roberts' husband testified previously.

[Roberts said Mrs. Ingalls told her daughter she had been cut out of the family will after the daughter tried to get their maid to leave them, the United Press reported.

[Roberts testified he and his wife had dinner with the Ingallses October 10 in Berkeley and that they called police after learning Dora had no place to sleep but in the car. He said police went to the car where Dora was sleeping. Later they explained the statute of limitations to Miss Jones and told her she could not be punished for something she did some 30 years ago. Police said Dora admitted having been intimate with Mrs. Ingalls' first husband, Walter Harmon.—Editor's note.]

Greek Soil to Sprinkle Grave of Roosevelt

New York, July 2 (AP).—Earth brought from the Parthenon on the Acropolis in Greece and contained in an urn more than 2500 years old will be scattered over the grave of Franklin D. Roosevelt at Hyde Park on Sunday by a delegation of Greek veterans of World War II.

The soil was taken up last September, at the time of the visit by the Carrier Franklin D. Roosevelt to Piraeus. United States, Greek and British officials participated in the ceremony at that time.

Citizens Aroused

Decision Put Off on Vepco Power Line

The Fairfax County Board of Supervisors yesterday deferred action on the projected Virginia Electric & Power Co. transmission line pending a ruling by the Commonwealth attorney.

The board directed Hugh B. Marsh to determine whether the company's proposal to put a 110,000-volt aerial transmission line through 17 miles of the county would violate the county's zoning ordinance.

This action came after citizens whose land would be affected had asked that if the line is essential it be put underground. They offered statistics to show that the company could afford this expense.

They said high tension wires above ground were dangerous and stressed the fact that the line would go through a section of the county that is being rapidly developed. They said such a project would prevent development of some land and decrease the value of some.

W. E. Wood, executive vice president, said the company which services about three-fourths of Virginia could not put the line underground without a "tremendous increase in rates." The company pointed out that if the line is put underground, every other community served by the company could demand underground lines.

Woman Jailed for Using Pliers on Boy's Tongue

Falconer, N. Y., July 2 (AP).—A 47-year-old woman who admitted she seized a 7-year-old boy's tongue with pliers in an effort to force an admission that he misplaced a baseball hat was sentenced today to 10 months in the county penitentiary.

Mrs. Agnes Smith, mother of five, was sentenced on her plea of guilty to a charge of third-degree assault resulting from injuries to Richard Griffin, one of a truck driver's four children who had been boarded with her.

MINDING YOUR BUSINESS

Can Construction Reform? (1)

THE construction industry is not keeping up with the economic parade. It's losing out to the automobile, to the electrical appliance, to the clothing industry, and the farmer.

Back in the 'teens, 7 cents out of every dollar spent in the United States went for construction—for a new home, or factory, or sewage system, or highway. In the mid-'twenties that rose to 12 cents. By 1929, as real estate prices rose, construction's share of the national product was only one tenth. And it's never been as high since — even with President Roosevelt's help.

Livingston

In 1939— notwithstanding recent public works—construction amounted to only 7 per cent of total expenditures on goods and services. Today, notwithstanding the pent-up demand for new homes, for factories, and for State and local improvement, it's less than 6 per cent. In short, construction is only half as attractive to the United States buyer as in 1925-27.

Part of this is due, of course, to the fact that building has lagged in wartime reconversion. That's understandable. When the war ended, cast iron soil pipe, bricks, steel, lumber, paint, asbestos shingles, and the basic building materials were short. And workers had to be recruited into the building trades.

BUT MOST of such shortages are now behind us. In certain areas where housing is needed, carpenters and masons are out of work. That's not indicative of collapse. Lots of building is going on. But it's enough to suggest that the building industry is not operating at capacity. And the reason seems clear enough: price. James S. Adams, president of Standard Brands, put off the company's construction program because it "cannot pay out" at present wages and costs. And the real estate "ads"—the repeats—indicate that many a home, built for quick sale, hasn't "located" a buyer, even in overcrowded doubled-up areas.

Construction is pricing itself out of the postwar market because of its timidity. Maybe dollars spent on construction shouldn't be up to 10% or 12% of total outlays as in the 'twenties, but certainly they ought to be above 6%. And that's because contractors and workmen won't let themselves go. The industry's philosophy is well expressed by Richard J. Gray, president of the Building and Construction Trades Department, A. F. L., thus: "It is an obligation of the industry to exercise care that we do not, in this abnormal time, load the industry with so many workers that they will not be able to obtain employment and earn their livelihood in future years."

NO ONE KNOWS just how much costs are up because of the protective, institutionalized procedures in the building trades, because of make-work rules, bidding methods, manufacturer-contractor-union ties. The Practical Builder says that low productivity on the part of labor—"slow motion"—has added 10 to 22 per cent to house costs. But that's a matter of guesstimate—based on opinions of home builders, which are not exactly unbiased.

The precise percentage, however, is not important. What is important is that the very protectionism the industry resorts to is undermining basic protection—work. And it's particularly ironical that the protective procedures which had their roots in depression and unemployment should persist in a period when the demand for new building stretches almost as far as the imagination. Yet this is the time, the opportunity, for getting rid of some of its self-imposed restraints.

One needed reform is in building codes. Building codes have a two-fold purpose: (1) To protect communities against fire traps and unsanitary conditions; (2). To protect buyers against shoddy materials and construction. These codes are designed locally and are the product of many minds and many interests. Sometimes the protection of the interest transcends the public interest. For example, plasterers and plastering contractors want to see plaster specified in preference to wallboard. The plumbing industry wants certain rules as to type and installation of vents. Building material manufacturers want specifications which create demand for their products.

AS A RESULT, building code specifications became honeycombed with detail, are inflexible, and tend to bar new materials and methods. And to change a code is a laborious, time-taking procedure, like getting a new law on the books. Most towns would do well to copy New York. There a board of appeals has the power to grant exemptions from the code when a manufacturer or contractor can show that a material or method meets the requirement as to, say, sanitation or structural strength or fireproofing. That imparts flexibility to what otherwise would be a rigid document.

Code modernization is possible only if building contractors, mechanics, unions, and materials supplies dealers and manufacturers want it. For they, as a matter of practice, make the codes, working with the civil authorities. Thus, code reform calls for reform—a new mode of thought—within the industry itself. Is it up to it?

(The second part of this article will appear tomorrow, thus completing the series on the construction industry.)

Chicago Grain

Chicago, July 2 (AP).—July corn climbed to another record peak of 2.04¼ a bushel today, but other grain futures were weak, with wheat down 1⅛@2¾ a bushel.

July corn was influenced by a thin cash market, where 2.15 was paid for No. 2 yellow corn. The July contract is tight, with almost 15 million bushels of contracts outstanding and only about 600,000 bushels of cash corn in position for delivery.

Deferred corn and oats were sold due to generally favorable growing weather and a weekly Government crop summary that was less pessimistic than traders had expected. Wheat weakness apparently was due to the heavy crop movement, with harvest in full swing in Kansas and Oklahoma.

Wheat closed 1⅞@2¾ lower than the previous finish, July 2.30¼@2.30½; corn was ⅛ up to 1¼ off, July, 2.02⅛@2.02½, and oats were unchanged to ¼ lower, July, 99@99½. July corn stumped somewhat after hitting the 2.04¼ peak.

D. C. Deposits Dip, But Still Top Billion

By S. Oliver Goodman

Aggregate deposits of Washington's 19 banks remained above the billion-dollar mark as of June 30, but showed a $9,711,651 dip for the first six months this year.

The drop was considered surprisingly small in view of continued heavy Treasury withdrawals from savings bond funds. Individual and corporate deposits more than held their own, local bankers reported.

Combined deposits of Washington banks totaled $1,015,057,816 as of midyear, according to an unofficial compilation by The Washington Post made yesterday after Comptroller of Currency Preston Delano issued a call for condition.

Bank deposits here have shown a steady shrinkage since they reached an all-time high of $1,059,916,982 at the end of 1945. On June 30, 1946, the aggregate was $1,039,347,047, and on September 30 it had dipped to $1,026,355,507.

Had it not been for a 16-million upturn in deposits of Riggs National Bank, the total this year would have dropped below the billion-dollar level here. Thirteen of the 19 institutions reported a decline in deposits for the first six months.

Since the start of the year, Citizens National Bank has been merged with Union Trust, making one less institution.

Individual banks reported deposits as of midyear and the end of 1946 as follows:

New York Cotton

New York, July 3 (AP).—Cotton futures were irregular in slow trading today. The market closed in a range of more than $1 a bale on early commission house and New Orleans selling along with liquidation in nearby July. Mill buying and short covering later caused prices to move irregularly higher with final values 25 cents a bale higher to 53 cents lower. Most traders turned cautious pending the Government cotton acreage report on July 8, which will give a clearer indication of crop possibilities this year. One private forecast placed the 1947 crop at 31,174,000 acres, up 16.4 per cent over last year, but somewhat under the Government goal of 33,160,000 acres.

Two Worlds

When Mr. Molotov left Paris, he buried the last hope that we are living in "one world," and we must now get used to the idea that there are two worlds. The realization will have a grave impact upon the national policy of all countries. Thanks to Secretary Marshall's initiative, there can be no more pretense, and our daily object from now on should be to knit together all nations who are likeminded with us. We may yet find recruits behind the iron curtain, for the Muscovite rejection of mutual aid in Europe is bound to be resented bitterly by, for example, many Czechs and many Poles.

It is a relief to know that France has decided to drop off the fence and join the West. Italy will doubtless follow suit. But both of them are in for a "time of trouble" (as, indeed, we all are), though it is by no means certain exactly what their Communists will do. One thing only is sure. That is that, deviously or openly, they will seek to accomplish the aim set out starkly and crudely by Mr. Molotov. This is to keep Europe divided and prostrate. It should now be obvious to the meanest intelligence that the West must gird itself to retrieve and then protect its civilization.

Muddy Oil

Oil shortage or not, there is no shortage of efforts to make Russia appear the villain in the temporary domestic inconvenience we are suffering. From some of the charges emanating from the fanatics one would think that we were at war and that the Soviet has been buying oil as a dastardly trick to weaken us. This sort of irresponsible scapegoating, we submit, is exactly the kind of evidence to which Pravda points to sustain its complaints against warmongering in the United States. The truth is that oil shipments to Russia have had little if anything to do with the temporary reduced supplies of oil and gasoline in the Middle West.

Last year we shipped to Russia approximately 2,500,000 barrels of oil. So far this year the amount has been proportionately less. This compares with American oil consumption in 1946 of 1,773,000,000 barrels. In other words, we sent to Russia only a little more than one thousandth of the amount we used at home. Even though we have shipped more petroleum to other countries, the total is dwarfed by our own use. Nor could we lop off these exports suddenly without drastic effects elsewhere. We are, for instance, the principal source of the oil used by our good friend, Canada. What is causing the pinch is the shortage of steel in increasing the facilities wherewith to meet a demand at home which has grown till it is as much as the world's total prewar consumption.

An impartial investigation to disclose the truth about the oil situation could be helpful. But the demagogic campaign unleashed by Chairman Weichel of the House Merchant Marine Committee, with its reported browbeating of witnesses and its extravagant charges, only brings discredit upon Congress and increases the difficulty of our relations with Russia. We need facts, not headline hunting.

Militarist Or Not

The 120 prominent Americans whom former Justice Owen J. Roberts has marshaled in his emergency committee for universal training can by no yardstick be considered pawns of militarism. They constitute a well-balanced group of leaders of widely divergent backgrounds who recognize that an adequate program of military training is one of the fibers of our security as well as world order. They are urging on Congress a plan which has been described by General Eisenhower as vital to defense and retaliation against atomic attack. It is the only practicable method of building an active trained reserve. The Chief of Staff might have added a note on the supreme value of UMT to our diplomacy. Public opinion, recognizing these advantages, has shown strong popular support for military training, and congressional mail, according to Justice Roberts, is running 10 to 1 in favor of it.

The pressure of other legislation militates against enactment of UMT during the remainder of this session of Congress. In our opinion, on grounds of necessity, first priority among the present armed service bills must go to Army-Navy unification. But universal military training is an important corollary which demands early consideration. On this score the Roberts Committee can help by answering such thin arguments as those voiced by Senator Taft, who has allied himself with the bitter-end opponents. Mr. Taft, forgetful of the example of Switzerland, believes that UMT would Prussianize our youth and would be the beginning of totalitarianism in America.

Actually, universal military training is the antithesis of the militarism that Mr. Taft fears. The greatest threat in this direction lies in the necessity for maintaining a large professional Army. Universal training would make it possible for us to keep a relatively small Army because of the backstop of quickly available reserves. It would be far more economical to the taxpayers than the present system. As for building up a "military mind" or caste among trainees, if four years of war could not do this, how could a few months of peacetime training? Those who fear the stereotyping of our youth, it seems to us, have too little faith in the effect of American institutions and the heterogeneous character of our population.

Inheriting The Earth

Mr. Guy Irving Burch, director of the Population Reference Bureau, finds that the American people, taking them by and large, aren't as bright as they used to be. Or, to put it a little more sententiously, the level of intelligence among the population is declining. Mr. Burch seems to think that the reason is that the wrong kind of people have too many children and the right kind of people too few. One trouble seems to be that medical science by keeping the inferior sort alive long enough to propagate enables them to pass along their defective or inferior genes to descendants. "If this is true," observes Mr. Burch, "it seems reasonable to believe that unless society can replace natural selection with an equally effective human selection of the fittest, the American people are almost certain to deteriorate both physically and mentally."

Thus the moral seems to be that if the privilege of reproduction could only be limited to members of Phi Beta Kappa, persons with a credit rating of A or better, and residents of Chevy Chase and Spring Valley, we might in a couple of generations achieve a society in which every citizen would be comfortably housed, well educated and have good, refined white-collar jobs. Of course there is the question how in such a society any coal would be mined or any farm chores attended to; but it seems obvious that any society with such a high level of intelligence could think its way out of small difficulties like that.

Safer Air Travel

The first interim report of the President's Emergency Air Safety Board gives promise of a sweeping inquiry that will expose many of the inadequacies figuring in recent disasters. Wisely the board has directed its first scrutiny at airports themselves. After reviewing factors in the May 29 DC-4 crash at LaGuardia Field, it has asked significant revisions in the wind-weight formula by which safe take-off conditions are computed. It has disclosed, for instance, that the 3533-foot runway at LaGuardia Field was grossly insufficient for the ill-fated DC-4 that was unable to leave the ground. The board is now considering whether all DC-4s should be barred from runways under 4000 feet in length. This, we think, is certainly an objective to be sought in future airport construction and improvement. Meanwhile, in lieu of closing short runways, the board has urged other adjustments which will permit a safety margin. In addition, it has called for more accurate wind condition information, more indoctrination of pilots in the formula for take-off weights and uniform pilots' check-lists to be approved by the Civil Aeronautics Administration.

Even though such changes may mean reduced pay loads or reduced gasoline supplies necessitating more stops, the airlines, we think, ought to comply willingly, and, indeed, to suggest modifications on their own initiative. Their very lives are at stake. Meanwhile, we hope that the safety board will extend its efforts into the realm of safety aids. Recent psychological experiments at Wright Field indicate a high degree of pilot error in reading instruments quickly because of their complexity. Some means must be devised to reconcile the need for more safety devices with the need to simplify instrument panels. Moreover, the board might well ask that the CAA publicize all airline infractions of rules at the time they occur. Eight airlines paid $19,100 in fines last year, for instance, with little or no notice at the time. This is information the public ought to have. Finally, we think the board ought to emphasize the need for more funds for all aspects of the safety program, and that these comments should go directly to Congress. Even the most painstaking recommendations will come to naught if there is not money to carry them out.

Terminal Leave Bonds

When Congress last year settled on the expedient of issuing bonds to pay off terminal leave to former enlisted men in the armed services, it reached a neat compromise. Its solution ended what had been discrimination against enlisted men in denying them terminal pay and at the same time avoided the consequences of a large amount of money being dumped into the income stream. The device did not satisfy some enlisted veterans, who felt that since officers were paid in cash, anything less for the rank and file would continue the discrimination. The bonds, however, did prevent a large inflationary upsurge at a critical time. Issued for a period of five years, they bear interest at 2½ per cent. Thus, though he cannot cash his bonds until they mature, the veteran is assured of a nest egg at a definite date in the future. Some $1,841,594,000 in such bonds is now outstanding.

As might have been expected, efforts to curry favor with veterans now threaten to upset the applecart. Republican leaders have added the cashing of terminal leave bonds to the list of "must" legislation. The most recent bill is that of Representative Blackney, which would make all bonds and interest redeemable after September 1. We hope that Congressmen will see the danger in this proposal and will have the statesmanship to resist pressures accordingly. The inflationary effect of nearly two billion more dollars in purchasing power might be disastrous, and budgetary estimates would be chaotically upset. Convincing as may be the plea that former servicemen could use the money now, that is not the point. This is a case in which the criterion must be, not what is temporary justice for the veterans, but what is long-range justice for the country.

ASLEEP TO GOD AND SKY

How God must love the birds
Whose song more sweet than words,
Awakes each breaking day
With soaring roundelay.
How God must love the sound,
From tree, from bush, from grou[nd]
His praise in morning song,
Now faintly soft, now strong,
Until the sky is bright
With music and with light,
While we indifferent lie,
Asleep to God and sky.

Superintendent Barrett's Order

A new order put out by Superintendent Barrett may give the impression that the "holding" scandal has been cleaned up. The Post cannot accept this interpretation. Nor can it accept the department's assumption of the power to close the case against itself. It feels that the dereliction that has been laid bare cannot be corrected within the Police Department. The department operates under the rule of Congress as the government of the District. Obviously the lawmakers, not the police, are the body both to inquire into transgressions of the regulations and into any emendations that may be necessary. The matter is for inquiry by one or other or both of the District Committees of Congress. It would be a gross injustice to the Capital City if Congress were to let the Police Department—revealed in The Post series as guilty of hoodwinking both the Congress and the local citizenry on the dimensions of crime in the District—get away with a self-whitewashing.

We had thought from a statement of the chief of detectives issued Tuesday that in future all complaints were to be reported. Evidently it all depends upon what is meant by "report." The Barrett order, to be sure, declares that "all complaints of crimes shall be recorded at once in the proper record book." So far, so good. It is essential in the interests of knowing what is going on to have at least this much of a public record. But it is no less vital to have all reports transmitted on the police teletype net, in the interests both of good police work and of crime statistics, which are compiled from the teletype. However, there is no pledge in the Barrett order that complaints will ever get beyond the precinct records. For, immediately after the statement that "the report of such offense shall be transmitted on the police teletype system," the superintendent makes three categories of exceptions to his own order. Where there is a reasonable doubt on the part of the investigating officer, the report shall be "held," i.e., kept off the teletype. A second group of exceptions consists of cases of complaints which might subject a person of previous good character to public humiliation. Finally, complaints the disclosure of which might impede police investigation are to be excluded from the teletype.

Now there are no exceptions in the regulations governing the reporting system to be practiced by our Police Department. The Commissioners (not the present ones) laid down the rule in the '90s that "when reports of . . . crimes are made to the police, they shall telephone the particulars to the central bureau and to the inspector in charge of the Detective Bureau." The telephone was in use when these regulations were issued. The teletype has now taken its place, so that the plain meaning of the regulations is that complaints shall be put immediately on the teletype. In no other city would a police department dare to amend the regulations which it administers. Here it makes the effort because it knows that Congress can afford to give only part-time attention to District affairs. Right now, moreover, the members must be thinking about the early prospect of getting home—home being any place but Washington.

The Barrett order is avowedly an effort to "clarify" the "existing unwritten policy" of withholding reports of offenses committed within its jurisdiction. It does anything but clarify. We ourselves have had to interpret the order as meaning that all offenses will be put in the precinct book. Even that is not clear. We don't yet know for sure whether the superintendent means that his categories of exceptions will be kept only off the teletype and not out of the precinct record as well. We are giving Superintendent Barrett the benefit of this doubt. In any event Congress should spell out whatever clarification is needed after looking into the evidence of withholding we have already documented. That is its job. It would be a compliment to The Post which we don't deserve if Congress imagined that we had made a complete investigation. All that we have done is to provide the justification for a thoroughgoing inquiry by Congress. Congress owes it to itself to find out the facts upon which to base the remedial action that Superintendent Barrett is trying to institute for himself. It knows as well as we do that secrecy in reporting crime enables the police not only to put up a false front; it is the shield back of which the conscienceless can indulge in corruption. The more we study the Barrett order, the more it emits an ancient and fishlike smell.

Arms To China

An editorial in your issue of June 18 charges Henry Wallace with inaccuracy in stating that the United States has been lending military aid to reactionary elements in China. The June, 1947, bulletin of the Committee for a Democratic Far Eastern Policy contains several specific allegations which appear to sustain Mr. Wallace's charge. (The chairman of this committee was Brig. Gen. Evans F. Carlson, recently deceased, a man who was universally respected as a reliable expert on Far Eastern affairs.)

Among the specifications as to U. S. military aid to the Chinese government are the following:

1. Over 700 U. S military advisers are helping the government train troops and plan strategy.

2. The U. S. Seventh Fleet maintains its base at Tsingtao, which serves as a training depot for Chinese naval officers and ships' crews.

3. The ammunition in 35 separate dumps in the Tangku area was turned over to the Kuomintang. This included millions of shells, grenades, bombs and rockets.

4. Over 200 naval vessels are being turned over to the Kuomintang under President Truman's directive, with American sailors as instructors.

5. A large portion of the 925 million dollars surplus property "sale" (actual value over two billions) to Chiang by the U.S. is being resold by him in Latin American countries in exchange for arms and ammunition.

6. The U. S. has moved unilaterally to have some of Japan's military industries transferred to the Kuomintang as an advance payment on reparations before the signing of the peace treaty.

7. The U. S. has permitted Chiang to sell 200 million dollars worth of UNRRA relief supplies on the open market. The Wall Street Journal of February 20 commented that this "would put into his (Chiang's) hands an unmeasured quantity of Chinese currency, which might be of some use to him in prolonging civil war."

I note also that your issue of June 28 announces ". . . the sale to China of 130 million rounds of surplus rifle ammunition, for approximately one-tenth its original cost."

Dual School System

The difficulty in obtaining revenue for the public school budget, or for other District of Columbia needs for that matter, might be solved if Congress were to investigate the cost of operating a dual school system in the Nation's Capital. An integrated school system would represent a saving, it has been estimated, as high as 30 per cent of the annual school budget, or possibly six or seven million dollars.

Apart from the obvious failure to implement democracy when Congress maintains separate staffs and buildings and segregates one group of children, and apart from the failure of a Jim Crow system to provide equal facilities for all children (there have been five white schools constructed since the last Negro high school)—apart from these fundamental matters, the cost to the American taxpayer of maintaining two systems is distressing.

To meet the requirements of law and custom, personnel and facilities must be completely duplicated: on the board of superintendents, for teachers colleges, among the heads of departments; two sets of automobile tooling for two vocational high schools or two power machines for sewing classes in two other vocational high schools; elementary school buildings for white and Negro pupils who live in precisely the same neighborhood; duplicating equipment in two business high schools. The same duplicating and expense exists as a result of the presuming regulations of the District Recreation Board.

The school officials now seek a 50-million-dollar loan to equalize school facilities—and to perpetuate the dualism and expense. Although the loan is clearly justified, whether for an American integrated school system or for an undemocratic Jim Crow system, a portion of the loan should be earmarked to investigate this staggering cost and to plan for the coming integrated system.

Summer Camps

I agree with Y. D. Mathes' letter in The Post of June 26, on "Summer Camps." If they are choices of those who want them that is their perogative, but in the words of the letter writer, it is a "dangerous doctrine to aver that these things are necessities."

Up to the present time I have managed to survive without the aid of summering in camps, in fact, without summering anywhere else but home. The thoughts expressed by Y. D. Mathes, "that an opportunity to work, earn, and save for what is wanted, represents the social obligation, except in disaster," is a healthy summing-up of what otherwise has unnecessarily been considered a problem.

Administering Aid

Secretary of State Marshall's plan for rehabilitating Europe is a good one—in theory. But in practice its success is doubtful under present conditions—that is, having to entrust the carrying out of such plan to an incompetent Administration.

Also, as former President Hoover has indicated, great care must be taken that the use of United States money and materials to help Europe does not result in pouring American resources down a rat hole, and seriously weakening the United States economy. Only a strong America can save the world.

Any interruption to United States production and transportation of food and goods needed for European rehabilitation will seriously interfere with America's foreign aid plans. And President Truman's ill-advised veto of the tax-cutting bill (the action urged by left-wingers) will tend (1) to discourage industrial production; (2) to further dissipate American resources in an international New Deal spending spree, and (3) to hasten the arrival and increase the severity of the coming depression made inevitable by the Administration's inflationary policies which can result only in deflation.

The success of Secretary Marshall's European aid scheme will depend mainly on (1) an immediate thorough Government housecleaning to purge leftists and incompetents, and (2) the employment of experienced, practical, capable men to carry out such plan. Competent, efficient officials familiar with foreign conditions can be secured only by forgetting politics in selecting personnel for such service. Employing Republicans with New Dealish predilections does not constitute an abandonment of political considerations. Without competent personnel from top to bottom the entire program is likely to end in costly failure.

Delayed Unification

It would seem, with adjournment not far in the offing, that it is time for Congress to do more work and less talking on the pending bill for unification of the armed services.

The majority of the public seem to feel the unification move is a must for two prime reasons—elimination of much duplication in the armed services with a subsequent reduction in waste and expenditures, and the strengthening and streamlining of our military machine so that if ever again we are called on to fight a war we will be better prepared than when we entered World War II.

The United States, despite its successes in World War II, is one of the few remaining major powers which has not modernized its military setup through unified command. It is reasonable to assume that such streamlining, which includes an autonomous air force, would mean a considerable saving in time, money and lives in the event of another world conflict.

Yet in Congress there is one man who I feel has done more than any single person to block prompt action on a measure approved by all of our military commands and who I think is needlessly delaying the achievements that would be gained under unification. That man is Clare A. Hoffman, a Republican Representative from Michigan.

The Senate Committee on Armed Services already has given the bill a favorable report, and Senate leaders already have promised that the Senate will act on the measure during this session. But in the House, after long hearings, the bill is not even yet on the calendar. It was referred, not to the Committee on Armed Services, but to the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments. And the chairman of that committee, Representative Hoffman, has not been disposed to hurry. In fact, he recently said "that he was getting tired of being urged to act."

What kind of talk is that for a public servant? It is my thought that our duly-elected Congressmen are paid to act, not to dilly-dally over such an important problem, and then show resentment because their constituents want them to act.

But if we look fully into Congressman Hoffman's past record of performance we gain a better insight of why he seems to be deliberately delaying a matter of such importance to our country's defense.

Congressman Hoffman voted against the Administration when it sought to fortify the Guam naval base, against the repeal of the arms embargo, against the conscription bill, against the lend-lease bill, against the first lend-lease appropriation, against the extension of the draft, against the armed ship bill, against the belligerent zone restrictions, against the ship seizure bill, and against the second lend-lease bill.

In Russia, Congressman Hoffman would have been liquidated long ago as an "enemy of his country."

It seems the electorate of Michigan could at least do themselves and the rest of the United States a favor by seeing that fewer men of his caliber appear in our Congress as "representatives" of the people.

Clothes And Democracy

By Malvina Lindsay

Fashion's Leveling

RISE OF a woman department store president, Miss Dorothy Shaver of New York, to the $110,000 salary class is something more than an individual success story. It symbolizes the spectacular growth of a young industry and its far-reaching effects on American life. It also presages the influence of American mass production of clothing (and the American glamour cult) on the rest of the world.

Dorothy Shaver is another girl from the hinterlands who went to Manhattan, started at the bottom, and rose to be head of her firm.

She had what it takes to do this, but she also happened to get into an industry that had a future.

Ready-to-wear clothing made its great development after World War I. So did the cosmetic industry. Both opened up new employment fields to the masses of women who in the 1920s were making the usual postwar push into the business world. By the beginning of the last war, the clothing business ranked fourth among the Nation's industries, being topped only by food, oil and steel.

Both the clothes and cosmetics industries made spectacular gains during the war. Now they look hopefully toward new fields abroad as women throughout the world show greater interest in American's nylons and lipsticks than they do in its dishwashers and ideas.

THE COSMETIC industry has set its sights for a 60-million-dollar export business. Mass producers of clothing believe they will be able to spread one form of democracy by dressing peasants like patricians everywhere. Already Japanese women are so fascinated by American factory-made handbags that they are offering to trade silk kimonos for them.

This does not mean that the United States expects to hog the world clothing market. Americans are not equipped by temperament or background to compete with foreign craftsmen in the making of many quality types of goods which would find wide market in this country—if not shut out by tariffs. But the low-priced-mass-produced clothing that has given American shopgirls the assurance of debutantes is a distinct contribution of American industry.

The American social pattern in the last three decades has been deeply affected by the developing fashion industry. Class barriers of clothes have been broken down and feminine self-confidence and initiative have been encouraged by this. Social life has been quickened, provinciality lessened. Business has been spurred, millions of jobs opened, national prosperity helped.

ON THE OTHER side of the ledger, clothes and cosmetic advertising and promotion have stepped up style changes, developed a glamour cult that has brought steadily increasing drain on women's time, energy, and budget. Women now spend about 50 per cent more on clothes than do men.

The trend for the future is toward even more sartorial leveling—and perhaps regimentation—of Americans. Textile engineers and cosmetic chemists promise that it will soon be easier for the average woman to resemble a Hollywood beauty. Electronics are expected to work a change in the textile industry that will equal in importance the changes that took place 30 or more years ago when the factory took over the work of the family sewing machine. Textile production costs may be cut so greatly that high grade clothing will be available at much lower prices.

The Twentieth Century Fund in its recent survey of this country's future also forecast a change in clothing. Apparel will be better quality, lighter weight, less expensive, and rich and poor will dress increasingly alike, predicts the fund. If such a trend spreads abroad, as seems likely, thus eventually bringing the clothes and beauty cult within reach of the most backward of women, the effects may modify and even upset some social and political systems.

Spoiled Sunset

Have you ever sat at the back of the Lincoln Memorial and watched the sun go down across the Potomac? With a lovely concert from the Watergate and all of Virginia a wonderful green? It's so good that it makes you believe that everything is going to be all right.

At that precise moment an attendant, with a cigar butt in his mouth, shrills "closing up! Everybody out. Let's go!" I asked him how in the world he closed that beautiful spot. "We put chains around it," he said. Chains around the Great Emancipator? There they were, it was true with signs that said "closed." And still another barrier on the periphery. And with it all I was promptly and efficiently ejected.

I don't know what your reaction would be, but I was ashamed. I was ashamed that our Capital, even perhaps our Nation, thinks such petty regimentation desirable. What are we scared of? From whom are we being protected? Has Stalin made more inroads than we realize?

Coal Comes First

By Barnet Nover

Anglo-American Action Nears

VERY IMPORTANT and probably decisive high level conferences between Great Britain and the United States on the Ruhr coal problem are in the offing.

NOVER

An announcement regarding the concrete steps to be taken to bring up Ruhr coal production to a minimum of 300,000 tons a day—it is now averaging around 230,000 tons—awaits the final ironing out of differences between the two countries.

These differences are not now believed to be serious. Even the hitherto sticky question whether the Ruhr mines should be nationalized, as the British have long favored, or allowed to operate under private ownership, is not expected to be a stumbling block this time.

The need for Ruhr coal is too urgent for either nation to take a stand that would bar the way to a joint agreement. Certainly, both nations are agreed that a rise in Ruhr coal production would be of major help in speeding Europe's recovery.

IT IS PRECISELY for this reason that London and Washington decided to go ahead with bilateral efforts to boost the Ruhr's coal production without waiting for the results of the three-power discussions at Paris or subsequent conferences on the Marshall plan.

The question whether to wait for the outcome of those talks or go ahead with an Anglo-American program for the Ruhr was warmly debated.

The consensus was that since such a program was so desperately needed, that since it could be put into effect very soon and that, moreover, since it dovetails with the general pattern of action envisaged in the Marshall proposal, delay was undesirable. The break-up of the Paris meeting proves the wisdom of that decision.

THE RUHR'S most urgent needs are food, consumption goods and housing. Later—after production has risen to the 300,000 ton level—there will be a need for machinery to replace mining apparatus that was destroyed during the war or has worn out.

If these urgent needs could be met and met quickly, the belief in Washington is that obstacles that have stood in the way of increasing the coal output of the Ruhr would be overcome.

Certainly, monetary incentives alone are not likely to attract workers to the Ruhr or cut down the fantastic degree of absenteeism that prevails in the coal mines there. Money is of no value in a land where goods are practically nonexistent.

HOW CAN those needs be provided?

The housing problem, acute in the Ruhr as in many other parts of Germany, cannot be solved overnight. The presence in the Anglo-American joint zone of Robert Moses, New York's construction coordinator, who, among other assignments, is looking into Ruhr housing, suggests that the problem is about to be tackled vigorously.

With regard to supplying the Ruhr miners and their families with consumption goods, the War Department recently made an interesting discovery.

In talks with American textile and shoe manufacturers, Secretary of War Robert P. Patterson learned that the warehouses are full of women's dresses and shoes which the women of America simply refuse to buy.

Produced in wartime under wartime restrictions, they are out of style and inferior in quality to dresses and shoes being produced today.

These dresses and shoes would be worth their weight in gold in the Ruhr, or, what is much more important, worth many times their weight in coal.

It is also recognized that the food needs of Ruhr miners must also be met if production is to be stepped up and absenteeism cut down.

SPEAKING of food, a recent action taken by the United States Government in Austria shows what might be done to help step up food production in the occupied areas.

In Austria, the United States is about to break the bottleneck in fertilizer production. At Linz there is a plant which, when put into full operation, could not only produce all of Austria's fertilizer needs but an additional 200,000 tons that could be shipped to Germany.

What is lacking is coal. The Austrians tried, unsuccessfully, to get the coal—30,000 tons a month—from Poland. They will now get it from the United States. This coal will mean, in the long run, more food for both Austria and Germany, more production from the better-fed workers, and a more rapid rehabilitation of the economy of those countries.

The process, under the best of circumstances, is bound to be slow. The important thing is that at least in Austria and the Ruhr a real start is about to be made.

Walter Lippmann is on vacation. His column, "Today and Tomorrow," will be resumed on his return.

Washington Calling

Civil Rights Dilemma

WHEN ATTORNEY General Tom C. Clark appeared before the President's Civil Rights Commission in closed session not long ago, he came in for something of a grilling. Members of the commission wanted to know whether the Truman Administration did not itself threaten civil rights through the executive order on loyalty among Government workers.

Childs

Most persistent questioning on this line came from Bishop Francis J. Haas of Grand Rapids, Mich., and from Boris Shishkin of the AFL. They pressed down hard on Clark, demanding to know what right of appeal individual employes would have from the arbitrary action of department and agency heads.

Clark replied, as he has to all such queries, that he intends to be sure that the broad powers under the loyalty order are not abused. Bishop Haas, one of the most liberal and courageous churchmen in America, suggested that the order had already contributed to something very much like a witch-hunt in the Government.

Emphatically Clark denied any intention of witch-hunting. He repeated that every effort would be made to safeguard the rights of those suspected of disloyalty. Shishkin pointed to the danger of the precedent which others might misuse.

HERE, ONCE again, is the dilemma of our time. At the root of it is the perverted loyalty of the Communist and the fellow-traveling stooge. Their loyalty is to an ideology opposed to our form of society and our Government. Serving that ideology with blind allegiance, they will go to any length to do the bidding of the bosses of communism.

Now no one, except the members of the House Un-American Activities Committee who tremble at shadows, believes that many individuals of questionable loyalty have infiltrated into our Government. But no one can doubt that there have been some. Their very presence, even though they may have done a minimum of harm to national security, has raised a cloud of suspicion.

The other day, the State Department announced dismissal of 10 employes whose loyalty was in question. They were summarily dismissed under the McCarran rider to the State Department appropriation bill. Under the terms of that rider, they have no right of appeal.

Here is the danger and it is a serious one. By this procedure the individual is prejudged and found guilty without appeal.

In at least two recent instances, it has been proposed in the Senate that the FBI be given the right to pass on all new employes of a particular bureau. That would in effect be giving to a police agency the supreme power of Government. It would be a long step in the direction of the police state.

THE DEEPLY troubling thought in the minds of many men is that, in scourging the few who are disloyal, we may endanger the whole structure of liberty on which our free society depends. In this there is a terrible irony. In combating communism we can get the very kind of totalitarian controls on which communism inevitably rests.

The President's Civil Rights Commission has made a well intentioned move to point up the dangers in this troubled time and the need for further safeguards in law. Public hearings were held. A digest of the hearings was used in an effective Nation-wide broadcast.

Various subcommittees are now studying special phases of the civil rights problem. A wealth of data is being compiled on discrimination in employment with the end of the war. This will be helpful in giving a push to the new Fair Employment Practices bill recently introduced in Congress under the sponsorship of both Republicans and Democrats.

Shortly the commission will begin putting together the overall report. A lively discussion is certain on whether it should include a warning on the approach of the Truman Administration to the loyalty investigation. It is, of course, a presidential commission and the final form of the report will be determined by the White House.

The effectiveness of turning over a major problem to a commission of public-spirited citizens is open to question. The members of the Civil Rights Commission all have compelling outside interests, which means that they can give, at most, only part time to the inquiry. The chairman is Charles E. Wilson of General Electric.

With Congress in the midst of a chaotic rush to get out, no new legislation is likely. We may wake up one day to discover that civil liberties are not just a spare-time preoccupation.

Help For Europe

By Mark Sullivan

Large U. S. Outlay Not Necessary

BEGINNING last March, America has heard many statements, some from highly placed American sources, about the immensity and urgency of the need for recovery in Europe, particularly about the need of help from us for that purpose. The estimates of the amount needed from us have been huge. One estimate was a total of 50 billion dollars. A typical and modest one was six billion dollars a year for at least four years.

Sullivan

During the same three months in which these statements have been startling us, Congress was busy upon, and the public intent upon, our domestic fiscal condition—the size of our public debt, the need of taxes to support it, the desirability of beginning to reduce it. Inevitably the statements about the need of help to Europe, vast in quantity, have been disquieting.

A careful survey shows that our disquiet may be eased, though, of course, not wholly removed. European countries need help from us for their recovery, but the total amount will be much smaller than has been estimated. Also, when it is said there must be help "from us," the word "us" does not mean solely the American Treasury and taxpayer. Much of the American help will come from sources other than the Treasury and the taxpayer. Another misleading word, frequently used in this connection, is "give." American help to Europe will in large part be loans, strictly secured by provisions for repayment.

THE WORLD Bank has already provided upward of a quarter-billion dollars for Europe and is expected to provide a quarter of a billion more during the present year. This takes nothing from the American Treasury; our contribution to the World Bank has been made in the form of contribution to its capital when it was founded. In addition, private American banks have made some small loans to European countries and will make more. Much of our help to Europe will be in the form of credits extended by American industrial corporations to industries in Europe, or investments made there. The B. F. Goodrich Co. is setting up a plant in the Netherlands, and other American corporations will do this sort of thing.

Assurance that our help toward European recovery will be less than has been estimated is to be found in the outstanding and rather surprising result of a survey of European economic conditions. This reveals the progress which several European countries have already made toward recovery by self-help and from their own resources, through the sturdy initiative and energy of their own peoples.

AN EXAMPLE is the Netherlands. Taking that country's industrial production in a normal prewar year as 100, it endured the paralysis of war and enemy occupation, and by January last year had recovered to 63 per cent. Today, industrial production in the Netherlands is approximately 90 per cent of the 1938 figure. Even greater progress has been made by Belgium and France. An important step toward recovery is a kind of economic union which Belgium and the Netherlands are setting up together. Adoption of economic cooperation, by as many countries as are willing to join, is the first step in the Marshall plan, as a preliminary to help from us.

For further recovery, the European countries have two major needs. One is dollars, with which to buy from us materials they need, and get the machinery of international trade and exchange into operation. It is for this that financial aid from America will serve.

The other major need is coal. For several European countries the principal source of coal is the Ruhr in Germany. This is held back from full production by several causes. One cause is restrictions imposed upon German industry by the nations that conquered it. Amelioration of these restrictions has been prevented by failure of Russia to cooperate with Britain and the United States in agreements about the future of Germany. Besides, many of the Ruhr miners were killed or wounded in war or taken as prisoners of war. Also the Ruhr mines are highly mechanized and the training of new miners takes time.

Hull Would Have Won Race In 1940, Farley Writes

James A. Farley said yesterday President Roosevelt told him in May 1940 he intended to accept a third term in the White House after saying 10 monthes earlier that he would not run.

Writing in Collier's magazine, Farley told of a Hyde Park conference in 1940 in which Mr. Roosevelt referred to the 1939 talk and to a plan laid then for him to write a letter stating that he would not be a candidate.

Farley said the President then told him that after the 1939 talk the war started and "I could not issue that statement. It would have destroyed my effectiveness as a leader of the Nation and would have handicapped the efforts of this country to be of constructive service in the war crisis."

Then, he said, Mr. Roosevelt disclosed his intention to accept another nomination.

Farley said he felt certain that Cordell Hull, then Secretary of State, could have won the 1940 Democratic nomination hands down and could have been elected.

Says Hull Was Reluctant

He said Hull was reluctant to announce himself as a candidate. He quoted Hull as saying: "I do not want it to appear that I am capitalizing on my achievements in the State Department."

The Secretary, he said, added that if Mr. Roosevelt "chooses to acknowledge my services, that is another thing. So far, he has shown no disposition to do so."

Farley said that when he expressed opposition to a third term, Mr. Roosevelt asked him:

"Jim, what would you do if you were in my place?"

"I am going to answer your question," Farley continued. "In your position, I would do exactly what General Sherman did many years ago—issue a statement saying I would refuse to run if nominated and would not serve if elected."

Knew Mind Was Made Up

He said Mr. Roosevelt replied that he could not refuse to take the inaugural oath, "even if I know I would be dead within 30 days."

Commented Farley:

"I knew then that his mind was made up. On the whole, I never had any doubt that he had made up his mind long before. I am certain he had sold himself the idea that he was the only one qualified to serve during that particular period of the Nation's history. He believed, I am sure, that the world was in a terrible plight and he hated to turn over the reins of government to someone else."

Farley wrote that Roosevelt insisted upon the nomination of a Vice President "in good health because there's no telling how long I can hold out."

"You know, Jim, a man with paralysis can have a breakup any time," Farley quoted Roosevelt as saying. "While my heart and lungs are good and the other organs function along okay . . . nothing in this life is certain."

Hull Rankled, He Says

Farley also reported that Hull was rankled in May 1940 by Roosevelt's consulting with Hull's subordinates without word to the Cabinet officer.

"God, Jim!" the article said Hull exploded after Farley told of some of his troubles with the President, "You don't know what troubles are. Roosevelt is going over my head to Welles and Berle . . . He's even going over my head to Ambassadors. He doesn't consult with me or confide in me and I have to feel my way in the dark."

Sumner Welles was Undersecretary of State at the time and Adolf A. Berle, jr., was an Assistant Secretary.

Jap War Trial Witness Commits Hara-Kiri

Guam, July 2 (AP).—A Japanese witness committed suicide early today rather than testify against 19 compatriots charged with the bacteria and torture murders of 10 American prisoners of war on Truk Atoll.

It was the third suicide among Japanese involved in the trial and the second in four days.

Witnesses not charged with crimes are not kept in confinement, so Petty Officer 2/c Hiyoichi Ikeya strode unchallenged from the witness stockade into nearby jungle, and fatally slashed his abdomen with a straight-edge razor. "Sorry for this terrible act," said a note.

Russians Detain U. S. Minister at Budapest Airfield

Budapest, July 2 (AP).—Selden Chapin, new United States Minister to Hungary, arrived in Budapest by plane tonight and was detained at the airfield for 35 minutes by a Russian guard who said a Russian general was curious about Chapin's "road pass."

Chapin came from London and was accompanied by his wife and two children and two U. S. Embassy political experts, Ronald Drew and James McCarger.

After 35 minutes of delay, which included a phone conversation with Russian Maj. Gen. A. N. Kondratov, who wanted to know why Chapin did not have a Russian road pass, the automobiles were allowed to leave the field.

Chapin replaces H. F. Arthur Schoenfeld, who left Budapest last month.

Publisher Asks House to Legislate Against Poll Tax

By The Associated Press

Barry Bingham, president of the Courier-Journal and Louisville Times Co., urged a House committee yesterday to take immediate action to abolish poll taxes.

Bingham, speaking as a leader of Americans for Democratic Action, wired Chairman Gamble (R., N. Y.) of a House subcommittee:

"Americans for Democratic Action strongly urges immediate committee approval of antipoll tax legislation. This discrimination tax disenfranchises some 10 million citizens. It is imperative to protect the voting rights of these people by Federal law."

Gamble heads a House administration committee which has been considering various antipoll tax bills.

A member of the committee, Representative Vursell (R., Ill.) declared at the hearing that Chicago elections have been "a national disgrace and a local distgrace for many years."

Roger N. Baldwin, director of the American Civil Liberties Union, called poll tax requirements in seven Southern States "the last remaining substantial restriction on suffrage in the United States."

Maud Howell Smith, long one of Washington's most active players, returns to acting tomorrow night in the Jarvis Repertory Theater's production of "Night Must Fall."

The play will be performed for two weekend runs at the theater's home in Bethesda, with Gordon Wallace playing the whistling Danny who keeps a dismembered head in a hatbox. Mrs. Smith's role in the Emlyn Williams melodrama is the one long associated with Dame May Whitty.

Mrs. Smith's long, varied career includes leads with the National Theater Stock Company, in which she appeared with such visiting artists as Ethel Barrymore, Edward Arnold, Helen Menken and John Kellard.

Her last local appearance was in "Nesbie Steps Out," written for her by Zenda Branch. In the cast was another Washingtonian, who since has gone on to screen success as Betty Jane Greer.

Tickets are available for the Jarvis production at the Willard Hotel agency, the Disc Shop at 1619 Connecticut ave. or by calling OLiver 3351 for reservations. Performances are Friday, Saturday and Sunday nights and Saturday matinee.

Masons Settling Down So Cats Won't Stray

New York.—The James Masons will move to Hollywood within the next few weeks and establish residence there. This decision was based on the fact that for the third time since they arrived in America, one of their pet cats strayed and hasn't returned. The Masons feel that because they've moved so often—shuttling between Greenwich, Riverdale, W. 57th st. and Park ave.—the cats had no time to learn where home is . . . Jimmy Byrnes is writing his book in shorthand and some of his shorthand pages will be reproduced in the book . . . Frank Sinatra lost so much in his fight-promotion venture last week that he's quit.

Frank Sinatra

When Leonard Bernstein, the conductor, was in Paris recently, he met Henri Bernstein, the French playwright, and told of his fiancee, Felicia Montealegre, the Chilean actress . . . "After you're married," said the playwright, "I assume she'll change her name to Felicia Bernstein" . . . "No," the conductor said, "On a theater marquee 'Montealegre' looks better than 'Bernstein'" . . . "I've been in the theater 40 years," said the playwright, "and all that time my name 'Bernstein' looked all right on the marquees" . . . "For you it's all right," said the conductor, "but you don't have to be an ingenue."

Eugene O'Neill's new contracts give him the highest royalty percentage in the history of the theater. O'Neill now gets even more than G. B. Shaw does . . . The biggest party ever given in Russia since the days of the Czar is expected to be given when John Steinbeck arrives in Moscow. Steinbeck has millions of rubles in accumulated royalties there because his books have been so popular. He's not permitted to take any of the rubles out of Russia, but can spend them there . . . Bea Lillie will stop in Las Vegas on her way to the Coast. She says: "I have a split personality, so I'll sue myself for incompatibility and give myself sensationally high alimony."

Fefe Ferry, the film agent, went to Coronado Beach for a weekend. He went there in the elegant style. Ferry took his chauffeur and valet who, in packing the four bags full of proper beach attire, also packed the silk pillow cases and bed sheets without which Fefe says he cannot sleep . . . The owner of a nearby motel learned of Ferry's presence and invited him to visit and to be the judge of a jitterbug contest at the motel's Terrace Cafe. "Sir," replied Ferry, "among the things I brought is a wide berth—which I intend to give to the Terrace Cafe tonight."

Caryl Marsh, one of the directors of the American School in Paris, invited her brother, Bob Amsterdam, to visit her this summer. Amsterdam began studying the Baedeker, and then asked David Ewen, the music writer: "What's the minimum time one could spend in the Louvre?" Ewen told him: "Two minutes, if you know the exits."

One on the Aisle—

'Ivy's' Creepy Enough But It'd Make Town Crier Sob

By Richard L. Coe

MARIE BELLOC LOWNDES was one of the many patron saints of the late Alexander Woollcott. He relished her murder tales because they had a distinct flavor, rather like the bouquet of a fine liqueur.

Now a Lowndes story, "Ivy," has arrived on Keith's screen, with the fragile Joan Fontaine in the title role. It has a distinct flavor, but the Town Crier's shade must admit it falls a trifle flat before "Ivy" finally trips down the elevator shaft.

In a sense, you could say that this is Woollcott's own fault, for he did so much to popularize the art of polite murder that its story has become too familiar. Uxorial murder has become downright commonplace—on the screen, at least.

But Woollcott would have relished the loving detail in this film of Edwardian England. It was a leisurely time and Director Sam Wood has stressed this in "Ivy." Carriages and back alleys, billowing clothes for the ladies and quiet manners for the gentlemen, with graceful elegance to house them, set the key for brooding authenticity.

Ivy is the beautiful wife of a young man who has run through his inheritance to keep her happy. She's been having an affair with a handsome doctor, but she's already tired of him when she meets a really posh millionaire, who takes a liking to her and gives her husband a job. Ivy wants more.

Good Old Orpington

During one of her secret meetings with the doctor (who's now becoming far too insistent) she slips some poison into her bag and proceeds to pass it along to her husband in his whisky and soda. Friend husband begins to pass out but, alas, in the leisurely tempo of the day. When the doctor-lover comes to call, the other doctors on the case naturally are miffed. But Ivy's clever. She shifts the circumstantial evidence to her former lover and, but for Inspector Orpington of Scotland Yard, would have gotten away with it.

The details are finely drawn and the picture begins beautifully. You see the elegant Ivy slipping down a lonely street for a call on a seeress. This all-knowing dame (superbly played by Una O'Connor) foresees men and money in Ivy's life, which, naturally pleases Ivy. But she stops short of telling Ivy everything.

Much of Ivy's life becomes bound up in a handbag her millionaire buys her on a yachting trip. This has a secret hideaway in its clasp, eventually carries the poison powder and is hidden away after hubby passes on. When Inspector Orpington finally finds it, the jig is up.

Job for Scissors

The casting is superb. Joan Fontaine's Ivy is exactly what she should be, beautiful, polite and steel-nerved. Sir Cedric Hardwicke's Orpington is expertly spoken and the rest of the cast includes much of Hollywood's British colony, among them Miss Fontaine's mother, Lillian, as her companion, and Elsie Mendl's husband, Sir Charles, as one of the doctors. Lucile Watson is fine as the doctor's county mother. Their accents, by the way, are curiously mixed, with Richard Ney (the husband) pronouncing "been" as both "bin" and "bean," which the rest of the cast prefers.

But the paradox of "Ivy" is that in stressing the leisurely pace of the period it slows down too often to a talky crawl. A half-hour sliced to the cutting room floor would have improved "Ivy" a lot.

Keith's also has a splendid short film, "Passport to Nowhere," one of the "This Is America" series. It dramatizes more than words can the displaced persons of Europe today, a stirring deeply moving film which reflects, all too graphically, on our own United States.

"IVY." Universal-International release produced by William Cameron Menzies. Screenplay by Charles Bennett from Marie Belloc Lowndes' novel, "The Story of Ivy." Directed by Sam Wood. At Keith's Theater.

Hollywood.—It will be Joan and Jourdan in "A Letter From a Stranger," and I do mean Joan Fontaine and Louis Jourdan. The latter has appeared only in "The Paradine Case" here, and although that picture has not been released, virtually every studio in town has tried to borrow him. But Joan got him. Those two will make a really romantic-looking team. . . . Merle Oberon and Lucien Ballard were all set for their trip to England when Merle was offered two pictures. One is "Berlin Express," whose backgrounds are to be shot in Europe; the other is "Escape," which will be made in England, with Rex Harrison, who was a member of the supporting cast in one of Merle's first starring pictures. Merle hasn't yet decided which, if either, of the films she'll make. She'll have little opportunity to see the country if she does the pictures.

Joan Fontaine

Mike Still Discovering

Mike Curtiz has signed James Mitchell of the "Brigadoon" cast for "Shadow of Fear," an original screen story by Frances Marion. If James has got what we think he has, Mike will have a star on his hands . . . Mrs. Kirk Douglas was wanted for "Sign of the Ram," but the first thing she was asked to do by Columbia was take a salary cut. She said "No." She's a stage actress and a beautiful one . . . I'm glad the Finns got the 1952 Olympic Games, and I hope they get plenty of our American dollars . . . Ella Raines will welcome home husband Robin Olds with an elaborate Fourth of July party . . . It's a little late for Charlie Chaplin to be hiring Russell Birdwell to get him good press notices. Seems to me that Charlie's shenanigans have just about pressed him out of public life.

Lucky for Anna

Not long ago, Anna Lee went to England to make a picture, but was refused a working permit when it was discovered she had become an American citizen. So she'll come back to do "War Party" under the direction of John Ford, with whom she made "How Green Was My Valley." . . . Since John Schlotterbeck took over the management of the Hollywood-Plaza Hotel, you can scarcely get a seat in the cafe there. It's become that popular. . . . Katharine Cornell again wants Brian Aherne as her co-star on the stage; this time for "Antony and Cleopatra." Connie Bennett also would like to snag him for her picture, "Smart Woman." . . . I've learned that at the time of his death, Damon Runyon was working on a screen story in which Alex Korda planned to star Bing Crosby. . . . Dale Evans didn't lack escorts in Atlantic City, where she made a series of personal appearances. Each night 15 kids came to the show, sat through three performances, and walked Dale back to her hotel.

On the Beam

Gordon MacRae, whose voice is heard on three Eastern radio shows, will set the town on its ear when he arrives here for pictures. Three companies want him, but Bill Orr, who married Ann Warner's lovely daughter, was the first to put in a bid for his services. Orr is doing a mighty fine job as talent scout for his father-in-law, Jack Warner . . . Frances Dee isn't changing her screen name to Frances McRea, as reported. It still will be Dee, riding the gee-gees in "They Passed This Way."

Thousands Leaving City For Holiday

Washingtonians today will begin their usual holiday exodus, as other thousands pour in to spend the Fourth of July in the Nation's Capital.

Airlines, railroads and bus lines yesterday reported advance reservations indicate holiday travel over Independence Day may set a new high. Peak of the travel load is expected to be late this afternoon and tonight.

It is expected that those who plan to spend the Fourth weekend away from home will have reached their destinations by noon tomorrow, when most public transportation lines report the load of passengers is expected to taper off.

Navy Sends Eight Ships

For residents of the Greater Washington area who celebrate the Fourth of July at home, and for the throngs of expected visitors over the holiday, there will be plenty of entertainment, however.

Yesterday afternoon, eight naval vessels in Washington for the dual purpose of observing Independence Day and the bicentennial of the birth of John Paul Jones tied up at berths near the Naval Gun Factory.

Those aboard ships prepared to "dress ship" in readiness for open house tomorrow throughout the day, and on the afternoons of July 5 and 6.

Others From Area

Aboard the APD are EM2 Donald J. Urquhart, 2122 P st. nw.; S/2 Alfred T. Ketcham, 30 Old Glebe rd., Arlington; S/1 Charles E. Eller, 2109 Nash pl. se.; S/2 Harold G. Gegenheimer, 3415 Holmead pl. nw.; RM/3 Osmand H. Simms, 1938 Bennett pl., is on the PCE(c) 877.

Meanwhile, plans are readied for observance of America's Cavalcade of Freedom 1947, which will get underway at 7:30 tomorrow night on the Monument Grounds.

The celebration will be televised for the first time by DuMont's Station WTTG. It will be sent over the coaxial cable for transmission by the Columbia Broadcasting System.

The fireworks display, scheduled to be the largest in history, will be witnessed by what is expected to be a record crowd.

Sponsors of Program

The program is sponsored jointly by the District Recreation Board, Greater National Capital Committee of the Washington Board of Trade, Motion Picture Owners of Greater Washington and the Office of National Capital Parks.

Money Passed For Emergency

solved its conflict over emergency interim funds, Government agencies had technically been without authority to spend a nickel since midnight June 30, when the new fiscal year began.

In addition to broadened authority for fundless agencies to incur interim obligations, the compromise stop-gap bill authorized $813,000 spot cash for the District. It empowered the Veterans Administration to continue making current payments to veterans. It provided $430,000 for operation of the Labor Department's conciliation Service until August 21 when it will be replaced by a new independent agency.

The emergency measure also authorized the Agriculture Department to carry on sugar rationing for industrial users and advanced five million dollars for its fight against the hoof and mouth disease. It authorized the Interior Department to continue its reclamation projects and similar activities on a restricted basis.

No Debate in House

The measure shot swiftly through the House without debate, but in the Senate Joseph C. O'Mahoney (D., Wyo.) noted the failure to provide cash to meet payrolls. Senator Guy Cordon (R., Wash.), handling the bill, conceded no 1948 money would be available for payrolls until the regular appropriation bills pass.

Senator William F. Knowland (R., Calif.) pointed out, however, that no big Government payrolls will have to be met until the last 10 days of the month, by which time regular appropriation bills should be law.

O'Mahoney said legislative employes have a payday coming up July 15, and asked how that would be met. Senate Appropriations Chairman Styles Bridges (R., N. H.) replied that night hearings have been ordered on the legislative appropriation bill and regular funds should be available by July 15.

Bridges, who originally passed through the Senate a resolution giving Government agencies blanket authority to carry on at budget levels until regular appropriations are passed, described the compromise as "the best we could get."

Britain-Bound Envoy Taking Home the Bacon

New York, July 2 (AP).—Lord Inverchapel, the British Ambassador to the United States, frantically hunted butter and bacon on the New York waterfront today before boarding the Queen Elizabeth, bound for food-short Great Britain.

He said he was able to buy 10 pounds of butter and 8 pounds of bacon in a shop a short time before the ship sailed with 2256 passengers. He will spend two months in Britain.

Flood Crest Moves South Of St. Louis

Grand Tower, Ill., July 2 (AP).—Weary and begrimed flood workers shifted their fight to bolster weakened levees southward today as the destructive crest of the Mississippi River moved below St. Louis.

No major levee failures had been reported since the river ruptured four main barriers along a 90-mile stretch north of here yesterday. Waters from these breaks continued to spread and forced additional hundreds to flee to higher ground.

This river town of more than 1000, about 75 miles south of St. Louis, was completely isolated and officials arranged to move in food supplies by boat. Most of the town's residents planned to remain.

Several Villages Inundated

Several unincorporated villages in this area were inundated north of here. About 95 per cent of the residents of the flooded section of 55,000 acres had moved out. The remainder moved to the second floors of their homes.

The lower business district of Chester, Ill., population 5100, was inundated.

Residents of Dupo, Ill., a town of 2600, eight miles southeast of St. Louis, were putting up a fight to keep flood waters out of most of the town.

Soldiers Work on Levees

Army engineers sent 100 soldiers to work on levees near McClure in extreme southern Illinois. The Preston levees in Illinois above Cape Girardeau, Mo., were expected to hold.

The Mississippi remained at a peak crest of 40.3 feet at St. Louis for more than 12 hours and then began a gradual fall. It was that city's highest stage in 103 years. Damage there was generally confined to the immediate riverfront areas.

Two D. C. Men Given Forgery, Larceny Terms

Two District men drew prison terms and a third was given a suspended sentence yesterday after their conviction on criminal charges in Montgomery County Circuit Court at Rockville.

Indicted by a Montgomery County grand jury in May, they were: Leroy C. Lumsden, 27, of the 1200 block 34th st. nw., sentenced to six years in the Maryland State Penitentiary for forgery; Curt Bondbreak, 60, 3200 block M st. nw., given 2½ years in the Maryland House of Correction for grand larceny, and William Henry Evans, 21, 529 Morton st., who was given an indeterminate suspended sentence for grand larceny.

Lumsden was sentenced by Judge Stedman Prescott after pleading guilty to a charge that he forged a $100 check and cashed it in Silver Spring on March 30. A previous criminal record was taken into consideration when sentence was imposed, court officials said.

Bondbreak was found guilty of the theft of a watch and ring, which were reported stolen more than two years ago. He was arrested in February when, according to police, he pawned the watch.

Judge Prescott suspended Evans' sentence after he was told the defendant had stolen $250 from a Bethesda store, but later returned it when he apparently became alarmed at the amount of money he had taken. He had been in jail more than three months awaiting trial.

All three men were tried by Judge Prescott without a jury.

Pentagon Job Transferred To Employes, Contractor Says

A Norfolk contractor has filed protest with the General Accounting Office against the War Department's award of a Pentagon servicing contract to his former employes.

GAO is making inquiry into the protest of Robert C. McCallum, of Norfolk, who operates the United Intercommunications Installation and Maintenance Co.

For six months, through June 30, McCallum held the contract to maintain and service the Pentagon's intercommunications network. On July 1 the work was taken over by the Communications and Sound Service, run by Thomas H. Benton, 10104 Hereford pl., Silver Spring, and Floyd E. Yocum, 238 Portland st. se.

The War Department explained through a spokesman yesterday that the six-month contract for the last half of the present calendar year was awarded to the local company because it submitted the lowest bid of $2 an hour for the necessary labor, against four other contractors.

McCallum charges in his protest that Benton and Yocum were working for him on the Pentagon job at the time they submitted their own bid. McCallum further alleges that Government regulations forbid granting of contract awards to others than established firms.

While the GAO ponders the question, Benton and Yocum, together with a crew of six, are keeping the Pentagon's voice-boxes in working order.

Stores Asked To Levy Tax

trict by a District resident for delivery in Maryland are taxable.

4. In construction jobs, if the work is being completed on a "lump-sum" agreement, the contractor is considered the consumer and he must pay the tax.

5. However, if the work is being done on a materials-plus-labor basis, a sales tax must be paid by the home-owner on the materials used.

6. Material purchased in Maryland and shipped to the District of Columbia is considered part of an out-of-State sale and is not taxable.

Kennedy informed the District dealers that application forms for the $1 license as well as copies of the regulations were available at the Board of Trade office, 11th st. and Pennsylvania ave. nw.

He said the complete interpretations and report forms were now being printed and would be distributed later.

As Kennedy told the District dealers that he felt that the present problems would be quickly dissolved once the initial hurdles were cleared, Governor Lane in Annapolis said it would be some time before the mechanics of the collection were ironed out.

The Governor admitted that like most Marylanders he didn't like the sales tax, but said that it would make possible the granting of $42,092,781 annually to local governments.

Tardy Nurses to Wait A Year for Licenses

Richmond, Va., July 2 (AP).—Virginia practical nurses who waited that extra day to apply for a State license are going to have to wait another 12 months on account of their procrastination.

The State Board of Nurse Examiners said today that "a considerable number" of women applied Tuesday and Wednesday for licenses. The deadline was Monday midnight. For being late, officials said, the practical nurses will have to undergo another year of training before being licensed, regardless of their previous experience.

France Ready To Construct Atomic Pile

By Peter Kinss

New York, July 2.—France now possesses enough uranium and heavy water to build its first atomic pile, an experimental installation designed to let scientific personnel learn about atomic energy firsthand, to produce radioactive elements for research, and to enable some research in fundamental scientific knowledge.

The first blueprints have been worked out. The specialized machinery—tanks and pumps—involved in construction of the pile is now ready to be discussed with French manufacturers. Work on the machinery should begin this year, Dr. Lew Kowarski, scientific director under the French Atomic Energy Commission, said in an interview here today.

Dr. Kowarski, one of the first men to demonstrate a chain reaction by firing neutrons at Uranium 235, is currently serving as scientific adviser to the French delegation to the United Nations Atomic Energy Commission, at Lake Success, Long Island.

France's program, concentrated on peaceful applications of atomic energy, and specifically staying away from any effort to produce atomic weapons, has been under way since early last year, when the provisional government set up a commission led by Dr. Frederic Joliot-Curie, Nobel Prize physicist. The initial appropriation was 500 million francs—about $4,200,000—and Dr. Kowarski said the second year's funds had been several million dollars more.

New York, July 2 (AP).—John Gunther, jr., 17, who once stumped his author father with a question on a radio quiz show, died Monday night in Memorial Hospital.

The youth had passed examinations in April to enter Harvard this fall and was graduated June 5 from Deerfield Academy, Deerfield, Mass., despite intermittent absences from school for 14 months due to a brain tumor.

Richmond, Va., July 2 (AP).—Leonard E. Davis, former Richmond police officer recently sentenced to seven years in the State Penitentiary when convicted of raping a Negro woman here, was released from custody today under $4000 bond until January 15 pending final action on his appeal to the Virginia Supreme Court of Appeals.

Southeast Java Villagers Flee, Fearing Dutch Attack

Jogjakarta, Java, July 2 (AP).—Reliable non-Indonesian informants arriving here today said the southeast Java area around Banjoewangi was in a state of alert and that a large proportion of native villagers had fled to the interior in belief the Dutch plan to attack that sector if the current Indonesian crisis results in armed conflict.

The informants said the Netherlands navy constantly patrolled the Bali Straits and two Dutch warships were in that area when the informants left three days ago.

For the past two months, they added, Dutch warships frequently shelled shore targets on either side of Banjoewangi, apparently attempting to neutralize Indonesian gun positions. At least 10 persons have been killed in this shelling, to which Indonesian shore batteries often replied, the informants said.

Earlier, former Minister of the Interior Mohammed Roem was mentioned as a possible choice for premier of the Indonesian Republic which has been without a cabinet for five days.

President Soekarno, however, ordered leaders of the Indonesian Republic's Socialist, Nationalist and Labor parties to form a cabinet by noon Thursday and made no reference to Roem's Islamic party.

2d Casey Trial Slated for Fall

Baltimore, July 2 (AP).—U. S. Attorney Bernard J. Flynn said today Eugene B. Casey, one of President Roosevelt's wartime assistants with "a passion for anonymity," would be brought up for retrial in Federal court next fall on tax evasion charges.

The original trial, held last March, resulted in a hung jury. Casey was charged with evading $70,384 in the three years 1941-43. He paid the taxes, along with penalties, at the time of the indictment.

The Gaithersburg, Md., engineer and farmer testified that he was on special assignment for the late President in the early war years all over the country, and that he had little time to work up details for his tax returns.

Marshall Explains Bullet Sale to Chiang Kai-shek

Secretary Marshall said yesterday that last week's sale of surplus rifle ammunition to China did not indicate American intention to support the Chiang Kai-shek Government in the Chinese civil war.

The ammunition transaction, he said, was an individual case peculiar to itself. He explained that the ammunition involved had been made to Chinese specifications during the war and could not be used by American armed forces.

Asked at his press conference whether the United States would revise its "hands-off" policy in China, the Secretary replied that he had nothing to say now.

If Stomach Gas or Sour Food Taste Robs You of Sleep

Here's How You May Help, Whether You Eat 500 Pounds or 2000 Pounds of Food In a Year

You can't feel cheerful, be happy and sleep well, if your stomach is always upset. As age advances the "old stomach" needs more help. The reason is this:

Everytime food enters the stomach a vital gastric juice must flow normally to break-up certain food particles; else the food may ferment. Sour food, acid indigestion and gas frequently cause a morbid, touchy, fretful, peevish, nervous condition, loss of appetite, underweight, restless sleep, weakness.

To get real relief you must increase the flow of this vital gastric juice. Medical authorities, in independent laboratory tests on human stomachs, have by positive proof shown that 8S8 Tonic is amazingly effective in increasing this flow when it is too little or scanty due to a non-organic stomach disturbance. This is due to the 8S8 Tonic formula which contains very special and potent activating ingredients.

Also, 8S8 Tonic helps build-up non-organic, weak, watery blood in nutritional anemia—so with a good flow of this gastric digestive juice, plus rich red-blood you should eat better, sleep better, feel better, work better, play better.

Avoid punishing yourself with overdoses of soda and other alkalizers to counteract gas and bloating when what you so dearly need is 8S8 Tonic to help you digest food for body strength and repair. Don't wait! Join the host of happy people 8S8 Tonic has helped. Millions of bottles sold. Get a bottle of 8S8 Tonic from your drug store today. 8S8 Tonic helps Build Sturdy Health.

Clerk's Death Probed; Party Guests Quizzed

Cause of death of a 47-year-old Bureau of Engraving stock clerk was under investigation by the coroner's office yesterday after a knife wound in the man's back was found to be superficial.

The victim was Roy O. Smith, 325 E st. ne. His body was found at 11 a. m. yesterday on a day bed in his apartment. There was a shallow stab wound under the right shoulder.

An autopsy by Coroner Dr. A. Magruder MacDonald disclosed the knife wound was not sufficient to cause death and an analysis of the victim's organs was ordered. Dr. MacDonald withheld a death certificate pending result of the findings.

Meanwhile, homicide squad detectives had received statements from three of four guests who attended a party in Smith's apartment Tuesday afternoon and were searching for the fourth.

Police said the statements told of an argument which followed Smith's efforts to evict one of the guests and that the knife wound was inflicted at that time.

Smith's body was found by a tenant in the apartment building. There was considerable blood in the apartment. Broken glass was scattered about.

The victim, whose wife died about 18 months ago, began work at the Bureau of Engraving last March in the purchase, storage and issue division. He was first employed by the Treasury Department in 1940 as a building guard. According to Treasury records he enlisted in the Army in 1921 and was honorably discharged in 1939.

More Money Held Only Wa To Cut Air Toll

More air transport landing crashes are inevitable unless Congress appropriates enough money for installation of adequate aids.

This warning was passed along to the President yesterday by the Special Board of Inquiry on Air Safety in its second interim report to Mr. Truman.

The board pointed out that approach and landing accidents represented 35 per cent of all fatal commercial air transport crashes in 1946 and cost 85 lives.

"Their reduction," declared the report, "is not a matter of regulation but of the installation of adequate aids. They occur mainly during the winter months and at night, and unless some provision is made now for the procurement of these aids the tragic pattern of the past will inevitably repeat itself."

The Board, headed by James M. Landis, who is also chairman of the Civil Aeronautics Board, said the four most important landing aids needed are:

1—High intensity approach lights.

2—Ground control approach (GCA), by which pilots, through ground radar, are "talked down" into safe landings.

3—Surveillance radar, which enables control towers to determine precisely the directional position and altitude of planes within 20 or 30 miles.

4—Instrument landing systems (ILS), which are electronic devices that automatically (so far as ground control is concerned) provide the approach to airport runways and the glide path for landing.

Conceding that it is the "prerogative" of Congress to decide how far the landing aid program should be carried, the report offers a table containing recommendations submitted to the Congress by the President and showing what the results were.

This is the table:

	Recommended. Units	House-provided. Units	Senate-provided. Units
Approach lights	68	30	2
Ground control	23	9	2
Surveillance radar	25	9	4
ILS	68	30	0

The President recommended that $4,750,000 be spent for approach lights, $2,668,000 for GCA, $1,250,000 for surveillance radar and $4,760,000 for ILS—a total of $13,428,000.

The House pared the figures to $2,210,000, $1,170,000, $450,000 and $2,100,000, a total of $5,930,000. The Senate slashed even further, to $139,706, $232,000 and $200,000 with no provision at all for ILS, for a total of $571,706.

Capital Plane Seen by 4 Before Crash

Leesburg, Va., July 2 (AP).—Four witnesses testified today that they saw a big Capital airliner just before it crashed into a mountain near here June 13, indicating that the pilot must have had at least part-time visual contact with the ground. Fifty persons were killed in the crash.

The four, however, said the mountaintop itself was shrouded in clouds. All agreed that the plane was lower than they usually saw such big ships, but said it was flying smoothly.

It also was brought out that the crash, at 1600 feet altitude near the crest of the mountain, occurred with the big ship squarely on course, but 900 feet lower than the Civil Aeronautics Administration's regulations require planes to fly in the area and 1400 feet below Capital Airlines' own minimum for the run.

The witnesses who told of seeing the plane were called late on the first day of a Civil Aeronautics Board hearing on the disaster. They were Mrs. Helen Coulter and L. Gray of RFD 1, Charles Town, W. Va.; E. H. Mills of Winchester, Va., and Mrs. C. W. Duff of RFD 2, Charles Town, W. Va.

Permission to Come Down

The pilot, Horace Stark, had permission to come down within visual range of the ground after he reached Arcola, Va., on the way to Washington, company witnesses said, but company rules required him to stay at 3000 feet or more until one minute before he came over Arcola. The CAA minimum on the run is 2500 fet. The plane hit the 1600-foot mountain on the way.

James M. Landis, Civil Aeronautics Board chairman, sitting as one of the inquiry panel, closely questioned Harry G. Barnes and Charles Frazier, senior aircraft controllers in the CAA's Washington control office, about airline operating practices with reference to observation of the CAA altitude rules. Barnes was on duty at the time of the crash.

The discussion closed with this exchange:

Landis—"Then the CAA minimums mean nothing to the commercial airlines and you leave it up to the company rules?"

Barnes—"As far as I am concerned."

Landis' Suggestion Denied

Earlier Barnes had denied a suggestion from Landis that the order permitting the pilot to cross Arcola at 2500 feet or less constituted "an invitation to come down and try to make (visual) contact."

Barnes added that "this particular clearance was used to enable the pilot to come as low as he desired to meet the contact."

"Or to seek contact?" Landis inquired.

The answer was "No."

Barnes agreed with Oscar Bakke, inquiry board secretary, that it was not possible for the flight to come over Arcola at 2300 feet or less, and follow company rules.

At the time of the crash the DC-4 was headed for Washington from Pittsburgh, with clearance for a flight at 7000 feet on instruments on account of heavy overcast.

Kramer, Brown in Wimbledon Finals

This Morning

—With Shirley Povich

NEW YORK, July 2.—The men who have put the Yankees in their place—first place, by the way—are the Red Sox. With all due respect to the valiant labors of Joe DiMaggio, George McQuinn and rookie Pitcher Frank Shea, the Yankees owe their high station, 5½ games in front, to the collapse of the Boston club.

POVICH

The Yankees are playing no better ball than they were at this point last year, when they were struggling to stay in the first division, 8½ games behind Boston. On July 1, last season, the Yankees had won 42 and lost 28, compared to their record of 41-26 as of today, but this year the Yanks have no high-flying Red Sox to contend with, Boston, on July 1, 1946, was spread-eagling the league with 50 wins and only 19 defeats. This season the Sox are a 34-30 club.

Boston's failures account for the comparative tightness of the American League race, in contrast to last season. The Red Sox are no longer slapping down everybody. The improvement of the Athletics might be pointed to, except for the fact that the Browns have taken over the role of doormat, formerly held by the A's. It's the Red Sox, just another ball team this year, who have been the most effective race-tightener.

THESE YANKEES who are leading the league are not exactly the club that Manager Bucky Harris intended to put on the field when he talked of Yankee prospects in Florida last spring. First off, he had high hopes that Mickey Vernon would be his first baseman after Larry MacPhail was done waving a $200,000 offer in front of Clark Griffith's nose.

Harris didn't land Vernon, but he did discover that he had the league's best first baseman on his own doorstep in 37-year-old George McQuinn.

He presumed that the needed young blood for his pitching staff would be provided by young Don Johnson, the training camp wonder, but Johnson flunked out shortly after the season opened and Frank Shea came through for him. The Yankees have had their share of luck, what with Shea's 10 wins and two defeats leading the league's pitchers.

When the Yankees moved North, Harris' right fielder was Rookie Yogi Berra, but not for long. He couldn't field. So Tommy Henrich, who was supposed to play first base, is back in right field for the Yanks.

THE YANKEES' POSITION in front is to Harris' credit and testimony to his genius in juggling his talent. His club is on top, but Harris has probably had more problems than any other manager. His pitching staff has flopped on him at times, his catching bogged down somewhat, and rookie Bobby Browne, his hope at third base, couldn't make it.

So Harris shifted Berra behind the bat when Aaron Robinson failed to hit enough to justify his defensive weakness, and Berra has done all right. When Brown flopped at third, Harris called on the veteran Bill Johnson, and not only solved the third base job but injected some more hitting into what might have been a sorry-hitting infield.

Harris has been struggling along all year with a second-baseshortstop pair of George Stirnweiss and Phil Rizzuto who have scarcely hit their weight, but McQuinn, DiMaggio, Berra, Lindell and Johnson have been taking up the slack. Harris has had to wrestle for his winning combinations in contrast to the push-button tactics of Joe McCarthy who always had good ball players on call.

The unbelievable thing about the Yankees is that they could come out of third place and go comfortably in front at a time when Charley Keller was missing from the lineup for 25 consecutive games. Keller was benched by a mysterious muscle ailment in Detroit one day, and in desperation Harris moved Johnny Lindell into left field.

Lindell's hitting since that day has been even more sensational than that of McQuinn and DiMaggio. He was one of the players the Yankees were trying to trade to Washington for Vernon, incidentally. If that trade had gone through, the Yankee's obviously wouldn't be leading the league.

Joe DiMaggio isn't having one of his whopping good years with an average of .324, but the Yankees are in high luck nevertheless. The moderately good ball they're playing is all it takes in a year when the Red Sox are just another ball club, or did I say that before?

Other Yanks Slip

Stranahan's 71 Third in British Open

By Glenn Williams

Hoylake, England, July 2 (AP).—Frank Stranahan, wealthy young Toledo amateur, shot a 71 today to keep America in the running for the British Open Golf Championship in a heart-breaking first round that virtually eliminated three of the five United States contenders—Pro Johnny Bulla of Phoenix, Ariz., and Amateurs Bob Sweeny, jr., ace of California and London and Staff Sergt. Charles Jennings of Medford, N. J.

Stranahan's score in the opening round of the 72-hole medal play championship left him in third place behind a pair of sparkling 69s shot by Henry Cotton and a fellow British player, Laurie Ayton, who was born in St. Andrews, Scotland, but grew up in the United States.

Vic Ghezzi, Kansas City, Kans. pro, who was satisfied with a 75 that tied him with nine Britons after a round marked by intermittent showers and shifting winds that swept over the hills from the Irish Sea.

The rest of the Yanks faded fast.

Bulla Soars to 80

Bulla couldn't do anything right on his outgoing nine and wound up with an 80 that left him in a 10-way tie for fifty-eighth—far behind the line of safety for those who seek to reach the 14-hole finish Friday when only the low 40 will compete.

Sergeant Jennings, who is spending a furlough from his Air Force post at Wiesbaden, Germany, skied to an 83 and was far back.

Sweeny, who spends about half his time in Britain and once won the British Amateur title, had such a poor round that he refused to turn in a card and withdraw from the chase.

These performances left only Stranahan and Ghezzi within shooting distance of the final 40, who will be winnowed out in another 18-hole round tomorrow.

Two other overseas invaders, however, were still up in the running—Flory Van Donck, handsome bronzed Belgian, with 73, and tiny Norman Von Nida, an Australian, with 74. With Van Donck at 73 stood two British pros, Jimmy Adams and John Burton and Irish pro champ Fred Daly of Belfast.

Nats Droop Before N. Y., Trail 7-0

By Shirley Povich
Post Reporter

New York, July 2.—The New York Yankees, exploding with an extra-base hit barrage against Mickey Haefner, shelled the little Nat lefthander off the mound in the sixth inning, and were leading, 7-0, at the end of seven innings before more than 53,000 fans in the Yankee Stadium here tonight.

The Yanks moved into a 1-0 lead with great rapidity in the first inning after Stirnweiss whacked Haefner's first pitch for a double to right center.

After Henrich popped out, Stirnweiss stole third, with the Nats protesting that batter Lindell interfered with Al Evans throw. Lindell later singled to score Stirnweiss.

Nats Can't Score

Against Allie Reynolds, the Nats had men on base in both of the first two innings without getting a hit. Lewis was safe when Reynolds muffed a play at first base with one out in the first, but couldn't advance.

In the second, Grace walked and so did Priddy with one out, and they reached second and third on Evans' deep fly to DiMaggio. But Rizzuto retired the side with a fancy catch of Haefner's pop fly despite running into left fielder Lindell.

Stirnweiss opened up the third with a triple into the right field corner that touched off a 3-run session against Haefner and upped the Yanks' lead to 4—0. He scored on Henrich's fly to Spence, Lindell beat out a hit to Yost, DiMaggio checked in with his tenth homer of the year, a long blast into left field stands.

The Nats didn't get their first hit off Reynolds until two were out in the fourth when Travis singled uselessly to left. Haefner made the Nats second hit, a single with two out in the fifth, that was equally futile.

There was nothing futile about the Yankees, however, in the fifth. They jumped their lead to 6-0, suddenly. Lindell was hit by a pitched ball, Dimaggio singled to left, McQuinn rammed a two-run triple to right center, and Johnson scored McQuinn with a fly to deep center. Haefner finally retired, and Pierretti got the side out.

In a pregame feature, Buddy Young, the former Illinois halfback and track star who has signed with the New York football Giants, outsprinted George Stirnweiss by six feet in a 60-yard dash . . . The race was run for a $500 prize posted by Yankee President Larry MacPhail, and Young took a yard lead at the start . . . The time was announced at 6.2 seconds, only one tenth slower than the world record, but there were skeptics. . . . Young ran in football uniform and baseball shoes . . . A bit later, he circled the bases in 14.2 seconds, far slower than George Case's record time of 13.5 . . . The Nats' 20-minute batting practice cost them more than $60 with the squad hitting more than 30 fair and foul balls into the stands . . . When he took the mound tonight Mickey Haefner could look back on a sad record of only four wins in 20 starts against the Yankees during his major league career . . . When Stan Spence took a third strike in the first inning, it marked his fourth strikeout in six appearances at the plate against Reynolds this season.

Feller Hurt, May Miss Star Game

CLEVELAND, July 2 (AP).—Sidelined indefinitely by a back injury, Bob Feller tonight was a doubtful starter in the All-Star game at Chicago next Tuesday.

The Cleveland fireballer, who was forced to quit in the second inning of last night's game at St. Louis, learned today he had torn a few fibers in the large muscles of his back. X-ray pictures showed no other injuries.

Dr. Edward Castle, who examined the pitching ace, said: "I don't know how long the injury will be painful, but it will be several days before we can determine how soon Feller will be able to pitch again."

HE SAID he and Feller probably would make the decision on when the Tribe moundsman would make his next appearance.

Tribe Manager Lou Boudreau earlier said he believed Feller would not be ready to resume pitching duty until July 10—two days after the All-Star game.

Rapid Robert, who holds a pitching mark of 10 victories and six defeats, said he thought a strain on his side developed after he fell off the Shibe Park mound at Philadelphia two weeks ago and hurt his knee.

HIS PARTICIPATION in the All-Star baseball game in Chicago Tuesday hinging on the outcome, Bob Feller, Cleveland Indian fireballer, is examined by Dr. Edward Castle to determine the extent of a back injury suffered in Tuesday night's game with St. Louis. Budge Patty Bows Out, Pails Loses

By Bill Macklin

London, July 2 (AP).—Jack Kramer, top-seeded favorite from Los Angeles, bounced the last Australian hope out of the Wimbledon Tennis Championships today and lined up against Tom Brown of San Francisco in an All-American battle for the men's singles title in Friday's finale.

Kramer, a 25-year-old daddy, whipped Australia's Dinny Pails, 6-1, 3-6, 6-1, 6-0, after Brown had backhanded Budge Patty of Los Angeles, the tournament giant-killer, off the famed center court, 6-3, 6-3, 6-3, in semi-final duels lasting less than an hour.

Kramer Won Last Time

For the two Californians, their title match will be a carbon copy of their meeting in the finals of the 1946 U. S. Championships, which Kramer won by scores of 9-7, 6-3, 6-0, and there are few fans in England who doubt that he will come out on top again.

Before 15,000 spectators, nearly a third of them on tip-toe in the standing zones that were packed an hour before play started, Kramer turned on his vaunted attack.

He parried Pails' hot service—the Australian got only six aces—and turned the game to long rallies. Then, concentrating on Pails' backhand, he kept the Aussie ace anchored to one corner of the court until a cross court smash would earn a placement. He did it so consistently, it looked easy.

Jack Errs Twice

There was only one lapse in his winning strategy. Two errors in a row, when Kramer tried to scoot to the net and volley, helped Pails gain a 3—1 lead in the second set and he nursed the advantage through to square the score. That was the first set dropped by Kramer in six matches.

Jack, who likes to win every game in every set, answered Pails by dropping only one more game. It wound up an exhibition of American court skill.

Earlier Patty had warmed up the turf, now well worn from eight days of championship play, in a race along the baselines in futile pursuit of Brown's long game.

A surprise survivor scheduled by the seeders to have retired two rounds earlier, the unranked Patty boldly tried the tactics he had used in upsetting John Bromwich, second-seeded Australian, and Jaroslav Drobny, Czech Davis Cup ace. He rushed the net to volley.

It worked well for three games. He broke through Brown's service and led, 2-1. Then Brown, 24-year-old University of California law student, began hitting passing shots that by the end of the set had Patty pinned to the baseline.

Patty seldom could get to the net to kill or execute another specialty, a chop shot. If he did, Brown jammed those kickers back down his throat.

In Women's Play

Three seeded women's doubles teams moved into the semifinals, meanwhile, leaving one match tomorrow to complete the bracket.

Margaret Osborne of San Francisco and Louise Brough of Beverly Hills, Calif., the defending champions, ousted Mrs. Anita Ellis of Britain, former United States titleholder, and Jadwiga Jedrezjowska of Poland, 6—1, 6—3, displaying the form that is expected to win them another title.

Right behind them came the second-seeded United States team of Doris Hart, Miami, Fla., and Mrs. Pat Todd of Hidden Valley, Calif., who beat Joan Ingram and Ermyntrude Harvey of Britain, 6—3, 6—4.

Mrs. Jean Bostock and Mrs. Betty Hilton of Britain had a stiffer test in beating the South Africans, Mrs. Mary Muller and and Mrs. Sheila Summers, 6—3, 9—7.

Kingston, Jamaica, July 2 (AP). Jamaica today announced its official acceptance of an invitation to participate in the 1948 Olympics in London.

Payton Leads Qualifiers in Tam O'Shanter

Chicago, Ill., July 2 (AP).—With some $36,000 waiting at the end of the four-day 72-hole trek, 188 male professional amateur and women golfers start their stampeded over Tam O'Shanter's Rolling Hills tomorrow in the seventh annual three-ply All-American Tournament.

George Payton, Newport News, Va., professional, led today's play-for-pay qualifiers in which 120 non-exempt players battled for 52 berths. The Virginian carded a neat 69, three under par, a stroke ahead of Harry Todd of Dallas, Tex.

After three days of qualifying, the three-ring medal play circus was set for the opening performance, with 22 women, 40 amateurs and 126 professionals in the cast.

Golfdom's two biggest money winners, Ben Hogan and Jimmy Demaret, will not be among the starters, but Ralph Guldahl, Lawson Little, Lloyd Mangrum, Jim Ferrier, Bob Hamilton, Johnny Revolta and Sam Snead—anll winners of national crowns—will be on hand.

Under par, today with 71's were Henry Kaiser of Racine, Wis., and David F. Clark of Galveston, Tex., but from there, the scores soared to a gaudy 114 by Hiram Shankwiler of Chicago, who launched his round with a pair of snappy nines. Scores of 77 got into the title round.

Adding an international flavor along with Locke were P. G. A. Champion Ferrier, who was born in Australia; Edmundo Salas of Mexico City, and Paul Hahn of Hawii, in the professional field.

Although eliminated in the amateur qualifier, heavyweight champion Joe Louis will be on hand the rest of the week, playing an exhibition daily and autographing anything the fans offer him—except blank checks.

Bogley Gains Semifinals in National Tenni

Charlottesville, Va., July 2 (AP).—Second-seeded Sidney Schwartz of Brooklyn and third-ranked Gilbert Bogley of Washington crashed through to the semifinals of the National Interscholastic Tennis Tournament today, but in widely differing fashions.

Schwartz took just 34 minutes to breeze through Charles Devoe of Park School, Indianapolis, who sprang a major surprise Tuesday by upsetting sixth-seeded Walt Dockerill of New Rochelle, N. Y. Schwartz took command at the start and forced Devoe into numerous errors in winning, 6—1, 6—2.

Bogley, on the another hand, ran into difficulty with Tony Trabert of Walnut Hill High, Ohio, but finally prevailed in two overtime sets, 7—5, 7—5.

Second-Seeded Bobby Behrens and George King of Fort Lauderdale, Fla., took it easy in eliminating Tom Lewyn and Edward Brown of Scarsdale, N. Y., 6—3, 6—3.

Quarterfinal matches in the lower bracket for both singles and doubles will be played tomorrow on the University of Virginia Courts. In the singles, Top-Seeded Behrens tangles with Gerry Thomas of Washington and MacDonald Mathey meets Jack Turpin of Highland Park High, Dallas.

In the doubles, the No. 1 duo of Schwartz and Bob Luxenburg bump up against Walter Horsley and Bobby Cabell of Richmond, and Bogley and Jack Yates of Washington compete against Jack Turpin and Dixon Osburn of Dallas.

Skywriting, Floats, Barbecue And All for Babe

Denver, July 2 (U.P.).—Denver turns into a mardi gras town tomorrow to welcome home Babe Didrikson Zaharias.

The highest city in the Nation (literally) becomes the highest city in the Nation (figuratively) to greet the gangly gal who became the first American to capture the British Women's amateur golf championship.

Included in the plans are:

1. A parade, not just of decorated automobiles, but of carefully designed floats depicting the Babe's successes in her varied athletic career.
2. Presentation of a 15-foot key to the city by Mayor Quigg Newton and Gov. Lee Knous.
3. A gigantic barbecue open to the public general, beginning at noon.
4. A round of continuous entertainment for the barbecue crowd. Les Brown's Band is the backbone of the celebrating.
5. As the piece de resistance, someone has hired a sky-writing airplane to spread the legend "Hi, Babe!" across the Rocky Mountain sky.

Virginia Golf Tourney Opens

Lynchburg, Va., July 2 (AP)—One of the hottest title scrambles in the long history of the Virginia State Amateur Golf Tournament was forecast today as dozens of the Old Dominion's best simon-pures arrived here for warmup rounds before Thursday's 18-hole qualifying test tears the lid off the 1947 edition of the amateur classic.

Those who arrived early for the four-day event went right to work testing their drives and putts over the long, par-72 Boonsboro Country Club layout, where the tourney will be held for the first time in history.

This will be the first time in a decade that the defending champion—in this case, Edmund K. Gravely—will not be on hand to set the pace. Gravely, who won a year ago by thrashing Jack Hamilton of Hilton Village, has been disqualified by officials of the Virginia State Golf Association because, although he maintains membership in Richmond's Country Club of Virginia, he resides and is employed at Rocky Mount, N. C.

Alexandria Post Beats Arlington

Alexandria Post 24 defeated Arlington Post 139 by a 14-0 count yesterday at Alexandria in the second game of the two-out-of-three series for the Class A, northern division, American Legion baseball championship.

Willie Zehring pitched four-hit ball for the winners, striking out 13, as Alexandria evened the series at one victory apiece. The two teams meet at 4 p.m. today in the final at Alexandria's Municipal Stadium. The winner meets the championship team of the Class A, southern division, for the State crown.

Murtaugh Sets Fielding Record

St. Paul, July 2 (AP).—Danny (Whitler) Murtaugh, Milwaukee Brewer second baseman, was the holder of a new American Association fielding record of 37 consecutive errorless games today.

Murtaugh snapped the old record, set in 1925 by Fred McGuire of Toledo, in the second game of last night's double-header against St. Paul.

The veteran infielder started his errorless string June 4 when the Boston Braves sent him to the Brewers on option. Since then he has handled 204 changes, including 90 putouts and 114 assists, flawlessly, and has figured in 31 double plays, starting 14 of them himself.

Washington Boy Wins Skate Title

Oakland, Calif., July 2.—Eleven-year-old Jimmy Parker of Washington, D. C., won the United States Juvenile Boys Free Style roller skating championship here today.

Jimmy, Washington and Eastern States regional champion, defeated nine other regional titleholders. Three of the five judges picked him first, one picked him second and the other third. Second place went to Richard Fleischman of Detroit, and third to Claude Whitehurst of Norfolk, Va.

Worsham, Locke Meet In Golf Exhibition

Pittsburgh, July 2 (AP).—Washington's Lew Worsham, National Open golf champion, will compete with Bobby Locke, South African star, in an exhibition match Sunday, July 20, at the South Hills Country Club. Other competitors will include Sam Parks, jr., former U. S. Open title holder, and Ted Luther, Pittsburgh, three-time winner of the west Penn open crown.

Cavarretta Undergoing Treatment for Bad Ear

Chicago, July 2 (AP).—Outfielder Phil Cavarretta of the Chicago Cubs underwent treatment of an infected ear at the Illinois Masonic Hospital today, but his physician said the player probably would be available for the All-Star game at Wrigley Field next Tuesday.

Blackwell Probable All-Star Starter

Feller's Injury Swings Support to Oft-Beaten National

NEW YORK, July 2 (AP).—Bobby Feller's doubtful status in Tuesday's All-Star game at Wrigley Field, Chicago, has swung added support to the oft-beaten National Leaguers who have bowed to their American League rivals in nine of 13 previous meetings.

Not that the 1947 team figures to be a one-man proposition in which the appearance or absence of Cleveland's Rapid Robert will decide the issue. Close to two million fans and Managers Joe Cronin and Eddie Dyer have named strong 25-man squads. But Feller still is the No. 1 pitcher in baseball, a fireballing right hander whose All-Star game record included one paltry run and five stingy hits in 11 2/3 innings.

Knowledge that they may not have to face Feller is bound to bolster the Nationals' morale, only partly restored from last year's 12-0 rout by the St. Louis Cards' World Series victory.

Ewell Blackwell of Cincinnati, who is expected to start for the National League, will attract most of the attention in the pregame conversation because, like Ted Williams a year ago, he has been the most talked-about player this season.

Back of Blackwell, Dyer will have Harry (The Cat) Brecheen, who did a job on the American League champs for the Cards in the '46 series; Johnny Sain and Warren Spahn of Boston, Ralph Branca of Brooklyn, Schoolboy Rowe of Philadelphia and George (Red) Munger of St. Louis.

If Feller definitely is out, Cronin will be permitted to name a sub, but even so, he has a capable mound array in New York's Spud Chandler, Frank Shea and Joe Page, Detroit's Hal Newhouser and Dizzy Trout, Washington's Walter Masterson and St. Louis' Jack Kramer. Newhouser is the probable starter.

The starting National League line-up, with the exception of the pitcher, will be Johnny Mize, New York, first base; Emil Verban, Philadelphia, second base; Eddie Miller, Cincinnati, shortstop; Bob Elliott, Boston, third base; Enos Slaughter, St. Louis, left field; Harry Walker, Philadelphia, center field; Dixie Walker, Brooklyn, right field, and Walker Cooper, New York, catcher.

Other members of the squad who can see action after the starters have played the required three innings are First Baseman Stan Musial and Shortstop Marty Marion of St. Louis, Second Baseman Ed Stanky and Catcher Bruce Edwards of Brooklyn, Third Baseman Frank Gustine of Pittsburgh, Outfielder Phil Cavarretta and Andy Pafko of Chicago, Outfielder Willard Marshall of New York, Outfielder Bert Haas of Cincinnati and Catcher Phil Masi of Boston.

Although Slaughter is the only starter from the world champion Cards, St. Louis will have five members on the National squad, more than any other team.

Manager Dyer, who has been advised by President Ford Frick to "bear down," will be assisted by Coaches Mel Ott of New York and Ben Chapman of Philadelphia.

For a team that ran away with the league as easily as the Red Sox did a year ago, Boston is poorly represented on the American squad with only Ted Williams and Bobby Doerr on the list. The New York Yankees, who are threatening to open a commanding lead this season, have eight men on the squad.

For 15 of the players it will be their first all-star game—Shea, Masterson, Kell, Johnson, Mullin, Hegan, Robinson, Breecheen, Sain, Branca, Spahn, Edwards, Pafko, Haas and Stanky.

Backer Takes Field, Leads Team's Hitters

By Herb Heft
Post Reporter

NICK BASILIKO, investment corporation executive and backer of one of the top sandlot baseball teams in Washington, is the kind of boss who never demands from his employes things that he can't do himself.

Basiliko, now 33, started in the junk business eight year ago and built it up until last year he was able to purchase the Bond Building for a million and a half dollars. He is also president of the Basiliko Investment Corp., one of the largest real estate firms in the city.

An ardent follower of sports, Nick decided to back a baseball team in the National City Sunday League, one of the fastest unlimited loops here. He hired Pop Moran, the veteran sandlot manager, to take over the reins.

Then to show his fellow workers that he wasn't too proud to put on a uniform himself, he bought a first baseman's mitt and began to work out with his team. Manager Moran had already signed 17-year-old Bobby Rohr, all-high at Coolidge High for two straight years, to play first, so he was on the spot.

Pop though to himself, "Rohr is a good hitter, he can run, and field, and he's young. But Nick Basiliko is my boss. If I play Rohr, I'm probably through."

NICK knew what lurked in Pop's mind, and took the manager aside one day. "Look Pop", he said. "I got you to be manager because I thought you could get the Basiliko Corp. the best team in the city. If this kid Rohr outplays me, you're to use him on first. So what if I am a bench warmer. We've got to win."

Pop tried them both out, and Nick's big bat solved the problem. In the seven games played so far, the righthanded hitting Basiliko is clouting .410 and fielding well. He bats in the fifth slot, leads his team in runs batted in, and has been instrumental in boosting his team to fourth place in the 10-team league.

Nick has no illusions of future Big league stardom. When he attended McKinley Tech High in 1931-32-33, he wasn't good enough to make the team. He decided then that his future was in the business world.

Charles Town, W. Va., July 2.—Worthowning, a 12-year-old which once was traded for a goat, had plenty of push in his ancient legs today and won the Hanover Purse, featuring the Wednesday program here.

Carrying the colors of J. L. Garthwright, the veteran forged to the finish line two lengths in advance of Mrs. L. A. Whitely's Scotty's Own, with the Shangri-La Stable's Ron Light third in the field of eight.

With Jockey F. Kratz doing the booting, Worthowning was clocked in 1:55 2/5 for the mile and an eighth and paid an $8.20 mutuel.

Ron Light set the pace as Worthowning and Scotty's Own were being rated, with the latter running abreast of Chiff Chaff and being carried wide at the turns. Approaching the stretch, Worthowning came between horses and Jimmy Baird promptly brought Scotty's Own through on the inside rail.

Winner Goes Away

Ron Light weakened, Scotty's Own took a brief lead but could not stay because Worthowning charged thruogh the final 100 yards and was a going-away winner.

Jockey Sammy Palumbo won the day's secondary feature with J. J. Ring's Your Majesty. J. E. Crider's Happy Moose was second with Mrs. E. Bisesi's Out Front third. Your Majesty was a $4.40 favorite and stepped the about seven furlongs in 1:26 4/5.

The daily double on the "3 and 3" combination paid $29.80. J. R. Palmer's Westing won the first under good handling by Jockey Emilo Carrillo at $5.40 and Mike Sarno booted Marvin and Moore's Nova's Mark to the wire in the second at $11.

Baird Suspended

Apprentice Jockey Jimmy Baird, leading rider here, was suspended for five days for rough riding by announcement of the stewards today. Baird, who completed his year of apprenticeship today, was accused of cutting over on Floater at the head of the stretch in yesterday's seventh race, which he won with Mat Hampton.

Baird won the eighth race, the final of his apprenticeship on S. Schoch's Intelligentsia, the same horse on which he rode his maiden victory on July 3, 1946. This was his second winner of the day and brought his total for the 31 days of the meeting to 44.

Bill Bennings

Difference of opinion makes horse racing. I differ with the stewards considerably on the suspension of Jimmy Baird for five days. From where I sat it looked as if Aiken, on the inside of three horses, caused Floater in the middle to be pulled up. Baird's mount, Mat Hampton, was on the outside and seemed to keep a straight course while Aiken bore out. Of course, this situation always makes the outside horse appear the guilty one. Charles Town expects many race fans to stay in this vicinity the night of July 4 to take in the Saturday program. For this reason, the clubhouse dining room will be kept open until 8 p. m. to serve dinner. The Shangrila Stable claimed Golden Media for $1800 out of the Tuesday program. Henry Houchin, with the good Wayne Kendrick horses in his charge, is topping the local trainers with 12 winners. Edward F. Brining and J. G. Davis have nine each. Apprentice J. Becerril, from Mexico, speaks little or no English but he is a pretty fair rider. Jockey Al Bocson, making a comeback here, rode his first winner aboard Harv Aethel in the third race. Bocsom is a veteran of real fighting in the Pacific area and malaria has slowed his return to the saddle. See you on the rail. BILL.

Barney Welsh Gains Tennis Semifinals by Turning Back John Curtis

THE STRANGEST PEOPLE turn up in the strangest places these days. Witness this shot of Clark Griffith seated in a midget auto at Lanham Speedway. He's strictly trying it for size, however. Hubert Routt will drive the little speedster as the District Damon Runyon Cancer Foundation benefits by 10 per cent of the gate from tomorrow night's racing at the nearby track. Griff, chairman of the local foundation, is flanked here by Charlie O'Connell (left) and Mike Martin, Nats' scout!

Jim Thackar Routs Keiles By 6-1, 6-0

By Al Costello
Post Reporter

The veteran Barney Welsh demonstrated again yesterday he was the man to beat in the District of Columbia tennis tournament as he led a strong field into the semi-finals of the city's top net event of the year.

The No. 1 seeded choice recovered nicely from a rocky start to sweep aside game Johnny Curtis in his quarter-final test, 7—5, 6—1. Starting the second set, Welsh simply had too much many strokes and was too steady for his foe.

Thackara Advances

Joining Welsh in the bracket of four was Jim Thackara, who smashed his way to a 6—1, 6—0 triumph over the Baltimorean, Alex Keiles in a dazzling display of steady tennis. All afternoon, Thackara's shots were ticking the outside lines with tantalizing persistency.

One round behind, Don Leavens, Alen McCarroll and Phil Neff barged into the quarter-finals. Leavens rallied to overcome Nathan Askin of Baltimore, 4-6, 6-3, 6-1. McCarroll likewise had to come from behind to win over Kahl Springs, 1-6, 6-1, 6-3 while Neff was taken to a marathon first set by Jim Fox before emerging on the long end, 13-11, 6-4.

Willie O'Steen Herbert and Charlotte Decker stroked their way into the women's final with more or less ease. Mrs. Herbert turned back Pearl McCoy, 6-2, 6-2 while Miss Decker was having more trouble in downing Margaret Sweeney, 6-2, 7-5.

Herbert-Decker in Finals

Mrs. Herbert and Miss Decker then teamed to enter the women's doubles final by defeating the stubborn team of Libby Prince and Miss Barry, 9-7, 6-7. The women's singles final is slated today at 5:30 p. m. with the doubles joust for the crown immediately following at 7:30.

The Dr. Davey Johnsen-Bill Clifford match that ended Tuesday deadlocked at one set apiece and which was supposed to have been resumed yesterday, was postponed until today, 5 p. m., when Dr. Johnsen was excused due to pressure of business.

Yesterday's results and today's schedule:

Labor Faces Problem Of Firing, Then Hiring

LABOR: Congressional approval of its appropriation bill solved some problems while creating other ones for this Department. In brief, Labor faces this conflicting situation:

Kluttz

The firings of several hundred additional employes, but the hiring, within a month, of even more employes than would be fired. It's the sort of problem that gives budget and personnel people stomach ulcers.

The lay-offs appear to be definite. They are to be made in the Secretary's office, Bureau of Labor Statistics, U. S. Employment Service, and the Bureau of Labor Standards. In fact, the $200,000 given Labor Standards will make it a "paper" organization, as nearly all the money will be used to pay off the employes to be fired.

The probable hirings depends on how much money Congress gives the department to carry out new responsibilities. These are its new jobs:

To enforce veterans' reemployment rights under the Selective Service Law, an activity transferred to Labor when Selective Service folded up. Labor has requested $700,000 for this job.

Administration by the Wage and Hour Division of the law to outlaw portal-to-portal pay suits. Labor has requested more than one million dollars, enough to hire 500 or so new employes.

Provisions of the Taft-Hartley Act which will require the Bureau of Labor Statistics to make wage studies and the Department to keep tab on union finances.

Still pending, but on the GOP "must" list of bills, is the 60-cent minimum wage bill which would require a further expansion of Wage and Hour.

In all, Labor would need at least 1000 additional people for this work. Even so, it must fire several hundred more employes.

NLRB: It was given all the money voted by the Senate, which means it won't be required to make a lay-off while preparing to expand. The original House bill would have forced it to fire at least 100 more people.

STATE: Its appropriation bill is in conference but, like Labor, new troubles are brewing for the department. In fact, a bitter battle already has broken out among employes over the jobs that will be retained in its foreign propaganda division here.

Some of the people who are slated to lose out have gone to members of Congress to try to get the conference report to be written in such a way as to protect their jobs. Even court action is threatened in an effort to prevent lay-offs.

OHE: More than 50 career veterans who have been ordered fired by the Office of the Housing Expeditor met yesterday to map out a fight to save their jobs. A committee was appointed to confer with OHE and Civil Service officials as a first step.

LOYALTY: The House Rules Committee yesterday gave its okay to the Rees loyalty bill which would seem to assure approval of the full House within a few days.

However, Representative Sabath (D., Ill.) served notice that he'll fight the bill. He'll charge that the bill's opponents were not given a chance to be heard by the Rules Committee. The opponents, he said, who favor the President's loyalty plan instead, are Representatives Lyle (D., Tex.), Miller (D., Calif.), and Battle (D., Ala.), all members of Rees' House Civil Service Committee. A committee spokesman said the trio had been invited to appear.

Chairman Rees said his bill would cost 15 million dollars compared to 25 million dollars for the President's plan. But Civil Service and Budget Bureau officials say the Rees plan would be far more costly than the President's plan.

The plans are identical in many respects. However, the Rees plan would set up a single five-man board to pass on the tens of thousands of loyalty cases. The President's plan provides for dividing this work with the agencies, and for the creation of an appeals board in Civil Service. All employes now on the payroll would be investigated under both plans.

But even if Rees' bill is approved by the House, it's a good bet it'll never get out of the Senate Civil Service Committee. Chairman Langer is opposed to it. He believes the loyalty probes should be made by a joint congressional committee.

PEOPLE: John F. Herrman, Thomas P. Connor, John W. Finn, and George A. Henderson all started their forty-fifth year of service yesterday at the Naval Gun Factory . . . Frances Bratcher yesterday was retired from Treasury's cash division after 41 years of service.

6 Murderers Obtain Stays Of Sentence

Justice Morris Acts To Permit Appeals, Pleas for Clemency

Justice James W. Morris of District Court yesterday stayed the executions of six convicted murderers here.

The postponements were granted so that the doomed men could appeal to higher courts or seek executive clemency. The men were sentenced in differnt cases to die in District Jail electric chair.

The electrocution of Baxter Griffin, 42, 1807 8th st. nw., was postponed from July 18 to October 24. Griffin fatally shot Lee Hunter, 23, 1719 9th st. nw., through the nose February 8 in an argument over a card game.

Alfred L. Hawkins, 22, and Laurence I. Prout, 20, will be electrocuted September 5 instead of July 18. They were convicted of the robbery murder of John Paul Knight, 34, of 215 Indiana ave. nw., April 13 1946, in a grocery store where Knight was a clerk.

Lee Fook, 60, who killed Harry Lee, 45, September 22, 1946, in a mid-day Georgia ave. chase and stabbing, will die November 7.

The robbery-slayers of Maurice L. Bernstein, 52, June 5, 1946, in his Florida ave. drugstore, are to die October 17 instead of July 18. They are Reginald J. Wheeler, 26, and Jesse James Patton, 21.

Md. Payments To Jobless Drop For Second Week

Annapolis, Md., July 2 (AP).—For the second consecutive week, unemployment compensation payments to Marylanders declined during the seven-day period ending June 28. Total payments for the period were 290,770.

Russell S. Davis, head of the Department of Employment Security, reported to Governor Lane that payments in the counties were 5090 checks, totaling $82,635; in Baltimore, 10,537 checks, totaling $186,404; and out-of-State claimants received 1062 checks, totaling $21,731. In the separate category of self-employed persons there were 139 continued, totaling $12,832.

Maggie the Mean, On Prowl Again, Bites Third Victim

Merson, a former GI, is the keeper of Maggie, a 30-pound Rhesus monkey known as "the meanest in the Druid Hill Zoo."

The attendant became the third victim of Maggie's wrath as he was cleaning out her cage this morning.

Suspension of Refuse Collection Averted

A threatened shutdown of refuse collection service in Rockville, Md., has been averted by the promise of a private contractor to continue his service until other provisions can be made by the town. Blake Merson, who had announced several weeks ago he would collect no more trash or garbage after June 30, agreed to extend the service until August 1 when two Army surplus incinerators will be put into use by the town. A monthly charge will be assessed against homeowners for the service.

For Driving Course

Corning Asks Traffic Law Revisions

A change in District traffic laws to permit public schools to use cars loaned by an automobile group for driving instruction will be asked by Dr. Hobart M. Corning.

The school superintendent said yesterday he will ask the Commissioners to seek a change in the law.

Eight automobiles equipped with dual controls have been offered by the interindustry safety committee for use in the District's high schools.

Dr. Corning said that under present laws the instructor and school officials as well as the student are Liable for pesonal and property damage in case of accident.

District regulations also call for but one learner in a car at a time. This would seriously curtail the number of students who could participate in the program, Dr. Corning believes.

He also will seek to by-pass the $3 learner's permit fee charged by the District.

Other problems to be solved before the driving course can be added to the high school curriculum are garaging of the cars and acquisition of funds to hire teachers, Dr. Corning said.

The committee offering the cars is composed of automotive, tire and petroleum manufacturers and District dealers.

Lauderdale Sworn As PUC Member

James W. Lauderdale was sworn in yesterday as a member of the District Public Utilities Commission to serve a three-year term.

Associate District Court Justice Richmond B. Keech administered the oath shortly before 4 p. m. in the District Building office of PUC Chairman James H. Flanagan.

Lauderdale was first appointed to the PUC last October to fill an unexpired term. The Senate confirmed the new three-year appointment Tuesday.

$300 Stolen From Office of Sen. Robertson

Jewels, Safe Taken In Other Burglaries; 3 Men Are Held Up

Robbers and jewel thieves carried off loot valued at more than $2500 early yesterday, including $300 from the Capitol Hill offices of Senator Edward V. Robertson (R., Wyo.).

The jewel theft, in which the loss was in excess of $1000, was reported by Mrs. Elaine Nash of 3300 O st. nw., who said a $500 pearl necklace with a diamond clash and a platinum, diamond-set bracelet were included. The jewels were taken from her home.

Jack Richards, administrative assistant to Senator Robertson, said he had 19 $20 bills wrapped in a roll for morning bank deposit. The roll was taken from his desk during the night.

The 125-pound safe in a gasoline station at 6403 Blair rd. nw., was taken out a shattered side window, manager Clyde H. Sorrell, 1460 Irving st. nw., told police. The safe contained $200.

Holdup men took about $200 from James Shoe, 28, of 3934 Ames st ne., manager of the Deauville Restaurant, 1629 Connecticut ave. nw. about 2:35 a. m. as he stood waiting for a taxi.

Shoe described the men as Negroes, both about 35 years old, five feet, 10 inches and weighing 150 pounds. One of the men held an "object" in his back while the other searched him and took the $200, he said.

Two other holdup victims were Naval Research Laboratory sailors, Roy L. Osborne and Robert Skyward, who lost $42 between them to three men they described as Negroes. One was about 25 years old, 6 feet tall, 180 pounds with a 2½-inch scar on the right side of his face. The second man was about 17, 5 feet 7 inches, 149 pounds. They had no description of the third.

Police said they reported the three men jumped them at an alley in the 1700 block of 6th st. nw., about 3 a. m.

Man Blasts Lock To Enter Woman's Apartment, Holds Her as Prisoner

Joseph P. Capeto, 48, who, police say, kept a former girl friend captive in her apartment at gunpoint, yesterday was held in $5000 bond for a continued hearing July 9 on a housebreaking charge.

Police were called early yesterday to the apartment of Miss Hazel Aguilera, 39, 2715 14th st. nw., by neighbors alarmed at the sound of pistol fire.

Entering, the officers noticed the muzzle of a revolver protruding from the bathroom door.

Inside the bathroom were Capeto and Miss Aguilera. Police asserted Capeto told them, "Get back or I'll shoot anybody."

At this point, Pvt. Edwin P. Grafton took a broom from the closet and forced open the door while Pvt. David White covered him.

Capeto surrendered without protest. Police said he had gained entrance to the apartment by blasting the lock with his revolver after Miss Aguilera had refused to let him in. A charge of assault with intent to kill will be presented directly to the grand jury, police said.

NLRB Accused Of 'Half Truth' in Gwaltney Case

Petersburg, Va., July 2 (AP).—Remmie L. Arnold, president of the Southern States Industrial Council, charged today that the National Labor Relations Board had resorted to a "half truth" in reporting a "citizens committee" rally held at Smithfield May 27, two days before a collective bargaining election at the meat packing plant of P. D. Gwaltney, jr., & Co., Inc.

The NLRB recently set aside the results of the Smithfield election and said a new election would be held when "circumstances permit a free choice among the employes." The order voided the vote of the meat packing employes who voted, 85 to 27, to reject the bid of the United Packinghouse Workers of America (CIO) to become collective bargaining agent.

Church Boosts Mission Budget

Roanoke, Va., July 2 (AP).—The Episcopal diocese of southwestern Virginia raised its missionary budget from $40,000 this year to $64,798 for 1948 when the executive board met here yesterday.

Christian Social Service—The Rev. W. Carroll Brook, Staunton.

Promotion Department — The Rev. Edgar T. Ferrell, jr., Marion.

Morgan State College President Is Named

Baltimore, July 2 (AP).—Dr. Charles H. Wesley was named today to succeed Dr. D. O. W. Holmes as president of Morgan State College at the close of the 1947-48 academic year.

Dr. Wesley, president of Wilberforce University at Wilberforce, Ohio, was recommended for the Morgan State post by a special committee of the board of trustees and received the board's unanimous approval. Dr. Holmes is retiring after 11 years as president.

Value of Williamsburg Restoration Outlined

Williamsburg, Va., July 2 (AP).—Vernon M. Geddy, vice president of Colonial Williamsburg, speaking at the first convocation of the 1947 summer session at William and Mary College today outlined the connection of the American tradition to the Williamsburg restoration and the role this city has played in the Nation's development.

Dr. George J. Oliver, director of the summer session, discussed recreation plans for the college students during the summer.

The largest single group ever to visit colonial Williamsburg toured that city last Wednesday, when 800 insurance men convening in Richmond arrived in a fleet of 24 buses, for a one-day tour.

Parents Ask Safety Guards To Prevent Culvert Deaths

1. LUCK WAS WITH THEM—Ellis Dunnell, 14, of 1925 Otis st. ne., and Thomas Doylse, also 14, of 1633 Newton st. ne., point to rocks over which they were dragged when swept through Mount Rainier culvert Tuesday by a flash flood. They swam to safety, but their companion was drowned

2. DEATH TRAP—Parents in Mount Rainier yesterday demanded that safety devices be installed at the open-ended culvert and drainage ditch near the Kaywood Gardens shopping center. Richard A. Powell, jr., 11, sought refuge from rain inside the culvert and was swept to his death by quickly forming torrent

3. IN CONTRAST to the wide-open entrance of the section of the storm sewer controlled by the Washington Suburban Sanitary Commission is the barred outlet which empties surface water from Northeast Washington at the city limits into an overflow pool on Eastern ave.

Alarmed parents at Mount Rainier, Md., yesterday demanded safety devices be installed at a huge culvert there, where 11-year-old Richard A. Powell, jr., was swept to death in a flash flood Tuesday.

The youth, of 1828 Newton st. ne., had sought refuge from rain in the culvert, with two fellow bicyclists. Both the other lads were also swept downstream in the quick-forming torrent but swam to safety.

Even while funeral arrangements were being made for the drowned boy, town and county officials and engineers were shunting blame for lack of safety measures at the open-ended culvert and drainage ditch near the Kaywood Gardens shopping center.

Protesting parents pointed out that slightly more than two weeks ago a similar drowning was narrowly averted when a man and woman pulled out another youth trapped there following a downpour.

The 25-foot culvert was only ankle deep with water when the three boys entered it, one of the survivors, Ellis Bunnell, 14, of 1925 Otis st. ne., said yesterday. But, "within minutes," he said, the water rose to 3 feet deep and tore their bicycles out from under them.

Young Powell lost his hold first and disappeared down the 400-foot-long culvert into an open V-shaped drainage ditch which carries surface water into the Northwest Branch of the Anacostia River. His body was found three quarters of a mile down the ditch, head submerged and wedged in a tree.

Bunnell and the third boy, Thomas Doyle, also 14, of 1633 Newton st. ne., became separated shortly after "Richie" disappeared. Both were swept through the culvert, which runs under a large parking lot, but swam to safety when they emerged from its exit.

The bicycles were not recovered.

Dr. James I. Boyd, Prince Georges County medical examiner, yesterday issued a certificate of accidental death.

Funeral services will be conducted tomorrow at 11 a. m. at the S. H. Hines funeral home, 2901 14th st. nw. Interment will be in Louden Park Cemetery, Baltimore.

Mount Rainier parents said yesterday they had long protested the hazards of the unprotected culvert and the open, concrete-surfaced drainage ditch in the Kaywood Gardens section of Mount Rainier. The culvert, they said, had become a regular "playground" for children.

Mount Rainier Mayor Floyd B. Mathias said yesterday he had no jurisdiction over the culvert area, which is under control of the Washington Suburban Sanitary Commission.

Mathias said the town engineer and commissioners had studied the situation in the past and the town engineer had "found it not practical" to fence it in. Town police, he said, were constantly chasing children from the area but "you just can't keep them out all of the time."

William A. Carson, president of the Prince Georges County board of commissioners, declared the county had no jurisdiction there, since the culvert and ditch were located in Mount Rainier.

Harry Hall, chief engineer for the Washington Suburban Sanitary Commission, declared yesterday it "is impractical" to install grates or flood gates there. Grates small enough to keep children out would clog with debris and create another hazard, he said.

The sanitary commission is scheduled to meet in regular meeting today and the culvert condition will be a main topic, Hall said.

House Group Hears Views Of Newsmen On Home Ru

Recommendations Cover Wide Field Including Return Of D. C. to Maryland

Four Washington newsmen yesterday gave Congress varied answers on what it should do about home rule for the District.

They testified before the House subcommittee on District reorganization and home rule, in the second session of a month-long public hearing.

Their recommendations covered a field including local self-governments, District representation in Congress and return of the District to Maryland.

Pusey Testifies

The four were Merlo J. Pusey, associate editor of The Washington Post; B. M. McKelway, editor of the Washington Star; Frank C. Waldrop, editorial writer for the Washington Times Herald, and Robert M. Buck, District Building reporter for the Washington Daily News.

The subcommittee, headed by Representative James C. Auchincloss (R., N. J.), also received written statements praising their program from House Majority Leader Charles A. Halleck (R., Ind.), and Minority Leader Sam Rayburn (D., Tex.).

Citizen attention to the home rule hearings picked up over the opening session Monday. About 25 persons, other than witnesses, reporters and officials, were present yesterday, about double the turnout for the first day. Hearings continue at 10 a. m. today, in Room 445 Old House Office Building.

Calls for Charter

Pusey told the subcommittee Congress should "give us a charter to operate as a municipality—an objective than can be achieved without flying in the face of the Constitution."

He said the city is "perfectly capable of managing its own affairs at the municipal level." He said Congress should delegate the municipal function to the city just as States to their own cities.

"I'd leave the general legislative power with Congress, and create a municipal council which could function as a genuine ordinance making body," he suggested.

Pusey said the District could never be a state, "Congress," he added, "has been given complete legislative authority over the District, and in my opinion Congress should always keep that authority, but I don't see how that interferes with the concept of establishing a municipal government."

Urges Amendment

McKelway said the first step toward self-government in Washington should be a Constitutional amendment giving the District representation in Congress and a voice in Presidential elections.

"The real government of the District, and I believe it always will be, the Congress," said McKelway. "The people of the District should be represented in that government."

With that, he said, "it would be a logical next step to grant to the citizens of Washington that degree of participation in local government that Congress found wise."

He said starting with a "gesture" toward local suffrage would "confer only the handicaps and very few of the benefits of bona fide home rule."

Favors Ceding D. C. to Maryland

Waldrop said Congress should either return the District area, except for Federal property, to Maryland, or permit an integrated plan for development of the Washington metropolitan area by enlarging the District.

He said he would personally favor ceding the District to Maryland so residents here would get the right to vote. He said enlarging the District would diminish chances for suffrage here, but might permit better integration in the area's development.

Marylanders Turning From Liquor to Beer

It's old-fashioned in Maryland to order an old-fashioned. Beer is on everyone's tongue.

That was indicated by the following figures supplied yesterday by the State Alcoholic Beverages Tax Division in Annapolis.

During June of last year the State netted $122,847 from beer taxes. Last month the yield was $155,422.

The report, covering the fiscal year ended June 30, showed, however, that beer—as well as distilled spirits and wine—revenues had taken a drop from those of the preceding months.

Wine, yield in 1945-46 $313,688; yield in 1946-47, $295,346, a decline of $18,342.

Truck and Cheese Burn

Mount Hope, W. Va., July 2 (AP).—A trailer-truck loaded with 27,000 pounds of cheese caught fire, and burned near here, the melted cheese oozing out and covering a considerable section of United States Route 19-21.

The driver, George McLaughlin of Miami, Fla., said he was unaware of the fire until some girls along the road brought it to his attention. He unhitched the trailer in an effort to save part of the load, but the gas tank exploded and most of the cargo was lost.

Lane to Attend Parley

Annapolis, Md., July 2 (AP).—Governor Lane said today he expected to leave for the Governors conference at Salt Lake City July 10 and return July 23. The chief executive said Mrs. Lane would accompany him on the trip.

Roop Takes Health Post

Frederick, Md., July 2—Dr. Donald J. Roop has assumed the duties of health officer of Frederick County, succeeding Dr. Elmer C. Kefauver, who is retiring after 23 years' service. Cucumber Pickle

Baltimore, July 2 (AP).—Another trailer-truck has come to journey's end beneath that low bridge on the old Annapolis road near here.

The latest of more than a dozen victims of the span, which has a clearance of slightly more than 11 feet, was a truck carrying a 12-ton cargo of cucumbers from South Carolina.

So many other trucks have banged into the girders of the underpass, the clearance numerals have been erased.

Herman Henry of Georgetown, S. C., was piloting the load of cucumbers when he misjudged the height of the girders. The top of the trailer added another dent in the bridge, the truck's top was peeled back, and a good portion of the cucumbers spilled in the road.

Va. Assembly May Get Plea From Renters

The Progressive Democrats of Arlington asked yesterday that a special session of the Virginia State Assembly be called to meet the "emergency" rent control situation in the county and in other crowded Virginia communities.

The group, which has 200-300 active members and is backing six "non-machine" candidates for county and State offices, asked Arlington Assembly delegates to make the request of Gov. William Tuck.

A State rent control law "with teeth in it" is needed to take over when the present Federal law expires next February 29, PDA Chairman Harold Schilz said.

Despite a clause in the new Federal rent control bill permitting increases up to 15 per cent only by "voluntary" action of both parties, tenants are in no position to fight the boosts, Schilz said.

Virginia tenants need "some assurance that the old ceilings are to be maintained by States legislation," he said, adding that the present State rent control law offers Arlington "little or no protection."

The State law provides for establishment of local emergency rent boards appointed by the governor when he finds an "emergency" rental situation exists in any particular area.

According to officials in the Alexandria-Arlington area Federal Office of Rent Control, the State law has never been applied to that region.

They said that "easily 75 to 100" worried tenants have called the office daily for rent control information this week, a majority of them Buckingham residents who face a 15 per cent rent increase under the new Federal law.

The PDA addressed its appeal to State Assembly Delegates George Damm and J. Maynard Magruder, and State Senator William D. Medley.

Boy Scouts Show Work of 'Cub Family'

The "cub family" in question is, of course, the Boy Scouts of America cub, rather than the ursus type cub. And, judging by the 23 parts of the exhibit which sightseers glimpsed, the work of a typical cub family is practically limitless in skill and variety.

These cubs, aged 9, 10 and 11, members of packs in the National Capital Area Council of the Boy Scouts of America, represent groups from the entire Greater Washington area.

The exhibits now on display show their handicraft achievements and include "things that go"—models of airplanes, boats, subs, cars, wheelbarrows, railroad engines, power turbines.

ajcmfwyp shrdl cmfwyp

They include models of boys in other countries, of national and world heroes. They depict the cubs as construction engineers with a model of a town, complete with railroad, church, farm, houses and recreation area, and with a model of an airport, equipped with landing lights which light.

Marking of the cubs ingenuity was a display of Christmas cheer with a Christmas tree made of wood, with decorations fashioned from tinfoil, cockleburs, walnuts, eggs and crepe paper.

Also as a part of the display, there is a minature backyard, described as scout officials as the "natura habitat" of the cub.

The exhibit, an annual affair of the area council, will continue through July.

Ask Anne — Your Questions on Homemaking

Please advise me as to whether it's possible to disinfect clothing that was worn at the time poison ivy was contracted last October. The material is a black rayon linen weave. M. C.

It's probable that there is now no danger of contracting poison ivy from contact with this garment. Any oil from the poison ivy plant that was on the material has undoubtedly been oxidized by the air long ago. However, just to be sure, air the clothing thoroughly out-of-doors. Then either launder the garment or have it dry cleaned before wearing.

Although I have aired the shower curtain regularly, there are increasing mildew stains on the inside. I can't seem to remove them. Can you suggest a remedy? I would also like to know if there's a way of removing the mark where the hemline used to be on a dress I lengthened. Commercial dry cleaning and carbon tetrachloride applications have not taken it out. Also, how do you remove soil marks from wallpaper that is not washable? C. N.

If your shower curtain is made of cotton, try soaking the stains in a solution of one pint of chlorine bleach to a gallon of water. Or spread stains with salt and lemon juice and place in direct sunlight. Old mildew stains are almost impossible to remove from fabrics, because mildew is a fungus growth which attacks the fibers. If the curtain is of plastic, scrub thoroughly with a brush and mild soapsuds, placing the curtain on a flat surface.

Removing the soiled hemline is a difficult problem and one that's almost universal these days. There's not much you can do except what you have done. It may help to soak the hem in cleaning fluid to soften the soil. Then spread the hem on an absorbent cloth and sponge thoroughly. Sometimes these marks will vanish after repeated dry cleanings.

To remove smudges or grime marks from nonwashable wallpaper, use either the dough type of commercial wallpaper cleaner or an art gum eraser.

My sterling silver has small dark brown spots which look like rust. At first, these spots were mere discolorations, then they developed into rust. What causes them and how may I get rid of them? These are little-used pieces like iced tea spoons. V. O. J.

Since silver does not rust, I believe the spots must be corrosion caused by salt or similar substances. Rubber can also eat into silver. If polishing doesn't remove the spots, take the pieces to a reliable jeweler. Burnishing by a jeweler will often remove spots that do not respond to ordinary silver cleaner.

In attempting to press out the hem of a black jersey dress with a damp cloth, the imprint of a small patch on the ironing board cover was left. I have tried unsuccessfully to remove these marks by pressing with a damp cloth on both the right and wrong sides of the dress, as well as by steaming over a kettle. Do you know of anything else I might do to remove these marks?

The vinegar-and-water cure for shine on materials should be helpful in removing the marks. Sponge with a cloth wrung out in a mixture of vinegar and water, then air the dress well to get rid of the vinegar odor. Press carefully with a damp pressing cloth.

My husband tried to remove a red wine stain from a white rayon or rayon-and-wool summer jacket by splashing water on it. This did not remove the stain and left a large rust-colored ring. I tried sponging it with ethylene dichloride, which didn't help either. I would appreciate any suggestions you may have. J. B.

To remove the wine stain, sponge with equal parts of alcohol and water, then pour glycerine on the stain and rub between the hands. Let stand for a half-hour and rinse with water.

A 10 per cent solution of acetic acid is also effective in removing wine stains. Apply with a medicine dropper and let stand only a few seconds. Stop the action of the acid by sprinkling with baking soda on both sides of the stain, dampening with water, and letting it stand until the bubbling stops. Then rinse with water and spread the garment in the sun.

Bleaching may be effective in removing the last traces of the stain, including the rust-colored ring you mention. Hydrogen peroxide is a safe bleach to use on rayon or a rayon-and-wool mixture. Simply sponge the stains lightly with a cloth dipped in peroxide.

Cocoanut and jam cakes are easy to make and a tasty treat to top off your Fourth of July supper. They're made of plain cake, spead with jam, and dipped in shredded cocoanut. You can use almost any kind of jam, but cherry or strawberry combine with the white cocoanut to give a colorful, patriotic effect

Food for '4th' Can Be Simple And Still Have '1776' Flavor

IF YOU'RE a stay-at-home this Fourth of July weekend, you can make it a gala occasion by having a few friends over for an indoor or outdoor supper. Keep the menu simple, but add patriotic touches reminiscent of the "Spirit of '76."

For example, use a sparkling white tablecloth as a setting for a red and white flower centerpiece. Arrange a few miniature flags among the flowers. Tie place cards with red ribbon to tiny dime store soldiers and let them march around the table.

As to the food, here's a menu that, while simple to prepare, is both substantial and refreshing fare for a hot day.

FOURTH OF JULY SUPPER

Macaroni and shrimp salad
Sliced tomatoes Stuffed celery
Hot muffins
Cocoanut and jam cakes
Ice cream
Coffee Lemonade

To make the salad, toss together macaroni (cooked and cooled), cooked shrimp, chopped celery, and minced olives. Add just enough mayonnaise to hold together. Chill thoroughly and serve on crisp beds of lettuce. The tomatoes and celery can be prepared in advance and it's easy to have last-minute muffins if you have prepared muffin mix on hand.

Making patriotic red and white cakes to top off your Fourth of July meal is no trick at all. Buy a plain or spice cake at the bakery. Cut the cake in squares and spread the sides with bright red jam. Cherry gives a beautiful bright effect, but strawberry or rasberry jam are good for this purpose, too. Dip the jam-covered squares in fluffy shreded cocoanut and center each one with an extra dab of jam.

Daughter of Old China Curing Ancient Ills in Modern Era

By Bessie Hackett

WHEN she was 15 years old, Mary Tan went to her father, a well-to-do Chinese merchant of Singapore.

"I want to be a doctor," she told him respectfully but firmly.

Her father listened gravely, but her old-fashioned mother was horrified.

Higher education was not for women, she declared. Their six sons might choose careers for themselves, but the eight girls of the family should marry and produce children—and the sooner the better.

Strength of Convictions

FOR the two years more it took her to finish high school, Mary continued the argument with her mother.

"I must help my people," she pleaded. "Old-fashioned superstitions and lack of education are keeping the Chinese backward in health and hygiene. Too many babies are dying when it's not necessary."

That was 21 years ago.

Today, Dr. Mary Tan, for 10 years director of the maternity and child welfare division of Singapore's Department of Health, is in Washington in the course of a year's study tour to find out why the United States has such a low infant mortality rate.

For wise Mr. Tan sent his daughter to study medicine at the University of Edinburgh and she returned to convince the Chinese, Malays, Indians and Eurasians who flocked to her free clinics that burning a baby's abdomen with a lighted bamboo sliver was not the way to cure colic; that liver and greens did not dry a nursing mother's milk; that a bowlful of boiled rice and bananas was not the diet to force down a day-old baby's throat, that the old grandmother, to whom sanitation was unknown, was not the person to deliver a baby.

Besides the three clinics under her supervision, this modern Florence Nightingale also controls the 1000 midwives and home nurses in Singapore.

Diminutive Dr. Tan, an even 5 feet and weighing less than a hundred pounds, has the exquisite features and charm of her race. Nor is she too modern.

Middle-of-Road Policy

"I DON'T want to spoil things for those coming after me," she explains. "I mustn't antagonize the older people about education for women. We must pick the best from the Western civilization and combine it with the best from the East."

In 1939, Dr. Tan married C. Y Koh, a Chinese architect in Singapore whom she met during their student days in England. They have a 4-year-old daughter, Diana. Mr. Koh is traveling with his wife during her year's leave from the health department. Their next stop will be Johns Hopkins in Baltimore and, after attending the National Pediatrics convention in New York, the Kohs will sail for London.

"They are so independent and efficient," she marvels. "They can run a home, drive a car, take care of a family, be companions to their husbands, help them entertain—and always look smartly dressed."

DR. MARY TAN

Diplomats Departing For Holiday Havens

By Marie McNair

BEATING the holiday rush for planes, trains and the highways were the Panama Ambassador and Senora de Vallarino, who left yesterday for a few weeks at Rehoboth Beach.

Mrs. Harry Andrews, wife of the South Africa Minister, and her daughter, Lydia, are also preholiday travelers, having taken the train yesterday to spend the summer at the Wianno Club on Cape Cod. The Minister will drive up today for a fortnight's rest.

The Brazilian Ambassador and Mme. Martins are already at gay Southampton, Long Island. The Chief Justice and Mrs. Fred Vinson, currently cruising along the Massachusetts North Shore, are expected back next Wednesday.

Stanley Woodward, chief of protocol, and Mrs. Woodward have planned a house party at their country estate near Charlottesville, Va., and President Truman will be down that way tomorrow for special ceremonies at Monticello.

Former Senator and Mrs. Davis Elkins are giving a house party for a few of their friends and a score or more young friends of their daughter, Katherine, at their summer home in Ventnor, N. J. Senator Owen Brewster is leaving to join Mrs. Brewster for the weekend at their home in Dexter, Me.

Off to Bermuda

Robert Hadow, Counselor of the British Embassy, and Mrs. Hadow had a few friends in for cocktails on Tuesday to say goodby before leaving today for Bermuda, where Mrs. Hadow and her children expect to stay most of the summer.

Others getting an early start on the holiday trek were Mrs. Warren Delano Robbins, who left for New York yesterday to be away 10 days; Mrs. Mitchell Palmer, who is having a visit with Mrs. Francis P. Garvan on her Long Island estate, and the British Minister and Lady Magowan, who took off yesterday for Maine to spend the weekend at a spot near Bar Harbor.

DR. JOA ANTONIO DE BIANCHI, for 14 years Portugal's diplomatic representative in Washington, has been recalled. But his government is handing him a plum in the Foreign Affairs Office. He's been named Secretary General of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs, which corresponds to the post of Undersecretary of State in America.

The dapper Ambassador began his diplomatic career in London as first secretary of the Portuguese Embassy. Seven years later he had risen to the rank of Minister. In the interim he represented the Portuguese government on the Commission de Ravitaillement during the first World War and at the same time was Portuguese Treasury delegate in London and Paris. During the Versailles Peace Conference he served as secretary general to the Portuguese delegation. After a trip to South Africa in 1922 for the revision of the convention between Portuguese colonies and the Union of South Africa he was named Minister to China.

Hats Packing Problem

In 1930 Dr. de Bianchi took over as Chief of the Political Division of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs in Lisbon and came to Washington as Minister in 1933. Three years ago he was elevated to the rank of Ambassador.

Mme. de Bianchi is up to her big brown eyes in crates, trunks and bags, which must be off before she leaves the end of the month. "And hat boxes!" she sighs, "How I wish I didn't have all those hats."

Correspondent Says Reds Fear Economic Bloc

Richard L. Stokes, Washington correspondent for the St. Louis Post Dispatch, yesterday termed Russia "a menace to peace."

Guest speaker at Zonta Club's luncheon in the Dodge Hotel, he told the audience, "In my opinion, Russians are more dangerous than the Germans. They are terrified that the Western powers will set up an economic bloc in Europe and will start a war."

Stokes, who was in Europe as correspondent with General Patton's army and later covered the Nuernberg Trials, pointed out that Secretary of State Marshall's famous Harvard speech was the first diplomatic setback for the Russians.

When queried in a question-answer period about the armed strength of the Russians, he replied, "Should trouble develop, the Russians have sufficient troops to reach the English Channel within a few weeks."

Asked to give first-hand impressions of the Russians, Stokes said that he met them first at the Elbe River, later in Berlin and in Nuernberg. "At Elbe the Russians welcomed us royally with open arms, plenty of drinks and friendliness" Stokes said. "The friendship lasted exactly two days, when the Soviet upped the iron curtain.

"Russian correspondents, who were all officers, were very friendly in Nuernberg," he continued. "We played chess together—but the Americans never could beat them. After a few days this first group was removed and the correspondents replacing them wouldn't talk or have anything to do with us."

Mrs. Dorothy Seates, club president, presided at the luncheon.

After 13 Years' Coddling of Unstable Husband She Once Loved Madly, Woman Feels Hatred Of Him Now as Her Championship Swerves to Son

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: Thirteen years ago, at 21, I fell madly in love and married my husband, then 28. Shortly after marriage I became pregnant. When I told my husband, he was very resentful that there would be three of us. He left us when the baby was six months old.

His family's physician told me he was an escapist and never would be any different. Being madly in love, I didn't believe him. Mutual friends advised that he should see a psychiatrist, but his family doctor opposed it, saying everything would turn out all right.

I left the baby with my mother and took a job to pay our bills and become self supporting. After a short time my husband returned, demanding his conjugal rights but refusing to provide a home for us. Two years later, at the urging of his mother, we set up housekeeping.

Things seemed to be going well until I was obliged to have a major operation. While I was in the hospital my husband left us again. Three months later he came back, asking to be forgiven and promising to atone for all he had done.

Doctors Say Man Can't Face Life

WE MOVED away from our hometown and during the war years things were fairly smooth until VJ-Day, when he was laid off work at the war plant. Although assured of reemployment as soon as possible he packed and left us. This time, with my physician's help, I did what should have been done before. I got him into a hospital for psychiatric treatment.

The psychiatrist who handled his case said it would happen again; that my husband just can't face life; that he needs someone to take care of him; and therefore, why not me? However, now that our son is 12, it is hard for me to keep peace between them.

My husband's resentment of him has lasted all these years. He doesn't mind showing it in words and deeds. He belittles the boy in front of others, denies him an allowance, and tells him to get out and earn his own spending money. Because of his attitude, I am afraid I hate my husband. Something must be done soon. They both need me; but I think my responsibility is to my son, don't you? Please advise. A. K.

Mother Beware Of Smother-Love

DEAR A. K.: Taking into account the sort of woman you'd have to be, to put up with this kind of man on his terms year after year, until your mad passion for him had expired, I certainly don't think it would be to the boy's advantage if you were to shuck off father at this point in the family history, and turn your energies exclusively to mothering Junior.

It was weakness, not strength, which made you assiduously indulgent of your husband's infantilism until recently. You were able to accommodate his resentment to the boy, blindly willing to let son take his chances in the reeling relationship, so long as papa's society was what you personally most wanted of life. Which means that mature-type regard for a child's welfare isn't indigenous to your emotional make-up.

If it were, you would have put your foot down years ago, when dickering about taking your husband back, and made fair treatment of Junior a "must" in the articles of agreement. As it is, after 13 years you're fed up with papa; you're bored with the marriage; son is emerging from childhood, becoming a person in his own right; and now he is the apple of your eye.

Make Son Better Man Than Father

THUS your present disposition is to slap a "mom" type sentimental championship on him; and nothing could be more disastrous to his character development and long-term happiness. So my advice is: Watch yourself. You don't have to hate your husband. You are deliberately letting yourself go in that direction. Study "The Sermon on the Mount," by Emmet Fox (publishers, Harper & Brothers), to reverse the trend.

Keep a proper emotional balance, keyed to the unselfish purpose of giving impartial devotion to these two who need your care, and you can be a miracle worker in reducing friction; also in developing manly qualities in Junior.

For instance, when dad refused son an allowance, if you palpitated with hatred of one and pity for the other, both would feel it—though you said nothing—and reciprocal tension would mount. Your cue as rational mediator would be to speak matter of factly with Junior, then or later, about jobs he might do and how to get started, thus wisely priming him to become the real man his father has never been. "Feeding the world's children will be one of the urgent problems to be discussed by the women leaders of the world in Paris," she said, pointing out that there are 30 million needy children in Europe alone.

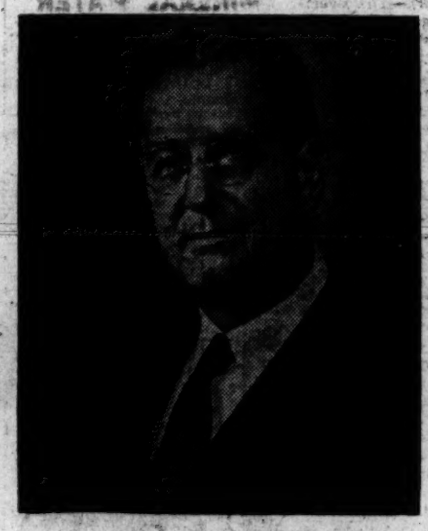
CLINTON P. ANDERSON
Secretary of Agriculture Says:



American Women—

Your Used Fats Are Still Needed!

America's homemakers have saved and turned in over 600 million pounds of used cooking fats since 1942. This is an average of nearly 20 pounds for each family in the United States. It is a record of which every woman can be proud.

However, it is still necessary to conserve every pound of fat, since the over-all fat supply situation is little better now than it was last year when we were desperately short, particularly of industrial fats.

Manufacture of many of the things we all use and wear in our daily lives requires industrial fats or the products of industrial fats. Used cooking fats turned in by American women have been and continue to represent an important part of our total industrial fats supply. Every pound of salvage fat helps meet the need.

Chiang Forces Badly Hit At Szepingkai

By John Roderick

Szepingkai, July 2 (AP).—Probably no army since the Chinese civil war began suffered so fearfully or struggled against such odds as did the American-equipped Chinese Seventy-first in its hopeless defense of this important Manchurian city.

Half of its Eighty-eighth division, which bore the burden of Szepingkai's defense, were raw recruits with only one week of training.

All accounts indicate that at least two thirds of the original 25,000 defenders were wiped out.

The Chinese Communists must have suffered heavy also. However, government estimates that 170,000 Communists participated and suffered 50,000 casualties, probably are too high.

(Hollington Tong, government spokesman, reiterated in Nanking today that the Communists received outside support. He declared the besiegers for 18 days threw shells into Szepingkai at the rate of 10,000 a day—"more artillery shells than all the Communist-controlled arsenals together could possibly supply." Their offensive was "unmatched in intensity and ferocity in the history of the Chinese Communists' military operation," he added. Tong also reiterated the Communists were strongly supported by Korean and former Japanese troops.)

Today, two days after the siege was lifted, the government's southern relief force—the new Sixth army from Kaiyuaan—continued its pursuit of the Reds.

The Nationals' new First army, which met rocky going south of Kuungchuling, is reported to be fanning off westward to try to intercept the Communists at Pamiencheng, 12 miles west of here, in a pincers movement with the new Sixth.

Street Fight Lasted 20 Days

When the real struggle began in the burned-out area it took the character of street fighting and continued in this fashion for 20 days, an almost unheard-of thing in warfare. Hand-to-hand engagements usually signal the end—not the start—of a battle.

Fighting at Szepingkai really began May 19, when the Reds made an unsuccessful attempt to wrest commanding heights north of the city. They leveled nearly half of the town. In the first five days of fighting around the airfield the Reds reportedly lost 5000 men.

Then, finding a soft spot in the southern defenses the front of 1000 home guards—the Reds penetrated the city June 14.

Man Accused Of 2 Slayings

Boston, July 2 (AP).—The sweetheart and estranged wife of a truck driver were slashed to death in slayings 20 minutes apart today.

Police Lieut. Joseph Fallon quoted the driver as saying he wouldn't contradict his crippled mother's statement that she saw him in one attack.

Goodlooking Hollis C. Tupper, 38, was captured in a wild struggle with police in a lunchroom early today. Later he was taken back to face his 64-year-old mother, Mrs. Charles Tupper, bedridden with arthritis.

The mother, Fallon said, told him she threw herself out of bed and across the body of Helen Kiminski, 33, pretty Brookline nurse, when the woman fell at her bedside.

She said her son shoved her aside and then plunged toward the nurse a hand which held "something shiny, like a knife."

Not more than 20 minutes after the son rushed out of his mother's house, Fallon said, police found in an apartment about a mile away the hacked body of his estranged wife, Katherine, 35, mother of a 13-year-old daughter.

Tupper "wanted to marry" Miss Kiminski and had been refused a divorce by his wife from whom he had been separated several years, Fallon said.

Senate Gets Chesapeake Bridge Bill

Maryland's two Senators asked Congress yesterday to let their State bridge the Chesapeake Bay near Annapolis.

They introduced a bill in the Senate to let the State Roads Commission build a toll bridge, tunnel, or combination of both across the bay. Authors of the bill are Senators Millard E. Tydings and Herbert R. O'Conor (Democrats).

The proposed toll bridge or tunnel would cross the bay on about the same course now used by ferry boats running from Sandy Point to the Eastern Shore.

The boats now carry traffic on a direct route from Washington and from Baltimore to the Eastern Shore and to ocean resorts like Rehobeth Beach, Del., and Ocean City, Md.

'Outsmarted' Rivals Squeal, Squeals 'Smart' Mule Dealer

Kansas City, July 2 (AP).—Fred Owen, Kansas City mule dealer, today took the position that "when you get a pig under the gate, he'll squeal."

His comment grew out of the bursting of the Mexican mule bubble.

Twenty mule dealers met yesterday in Washington, voicing complaint that they had purchased animals to meet a supposed demand in Mexico and now were stuck with them.

One of their number, they complained, went direct to the Mexican government and obtained an exclusive contract.

Has Contract on 20,000

Owen disclosed he was the "one of their number." He has a contract to deliver 20,000 "hard tails" to Mexico, with the exchange to be made at Eagle Pass, Tex. He said Mexico was paying him a flat $115 a head f. o. b., Eagle Pass.

"These guys are squealing. I outsmarted 'em and now they're trying to crucify me with a law that would keep me from exporting my mules," he said.

He was referring to a bill by Representative Lucas (D., Tex.), which would bar export of any mules except on permit from the Agriculture Department.

The miffed mule men said they had bought some 8000 head, which now are standing around eating hay at the rate of 50 cents each daily.

They related they had received inquiries from the Agriculture Department, asking how many mules they could supply. Later they received a formal invitation for bids. Still later, they said, they received word that all bids were rejected. The prices were too high.

After that came word of Owen's exclusive contract. The mule man said they received an offer from "one of their number" to buy their surplus mules at $65 to $85 a head.

"I never made those fellows any kind of an offer," Owen said. "Of course I'll buy mules anywhere I can get them if they're worth the money. But I haven't said I'd buy any of those mules at any price."

He pleaded guilty in Bronx Magistrates Court. Julius Jarecki, a city transit policeman, said he saw Browder in the act.

Pullen Assails Marbury Plan For Schools

Baltimore, July 2 (AP).—Dr. Thomas G. Pullen, jr., Maryland superintendent of schools, opposed today putting teachers' colleges and junior colleges under authority of a proposed State board for higher education as recommended by the Marbury report.

Pullen was one of several Maryland educators to assail before the Legislative Council portions of a survey made by the Commission on Higher Education headed by Judge William L. Marbury.

Pullen also opposed the elimination of Frostburg State Teachers College and proposals for elementary teacher training at hte University of Maryland, Morgan State College, and Princess Anne College, as recommended by Marbury.

Pullen told the council teacher and junior colleges were "an integral part of the State public school system and therefore should not be controlled or directed in any way" by the proposed board.

Blow at Present Board

"If a super board were established, the State Board of Education, composed of intelligent and interested citizens, would have its actions approved or disapproved by another board on the basis of secondhand information, and with little or no knowledge of the needs of the public school system.

"A conflict in opinion could be disastrous to the school system. In effect, it would transfer the authority of the State Board of Education to the super board.

"The State teachers colleges are primarily and solely professional institutions, training prospective employes of the State, and there is little or no connection between them and the work of the three other State institutions of higher learning."

As for the junior colleges, he stated they were an integral part of the public school system and should be controlled by the local boards of education. He said they should be closely coordinated with the high school program.

650 Teachers pre Year

Pullen declared it would be "unsound" to change the teacher training program, since the teacher colleges were organized, staffed and equipped for the single purpose of training teachers for Maryland elementary and junior high schools, "and they can do it better than any other institution."

He estimated the State would require 650 such teachers annually within four years, and that Maryland would have to provide 500 of them.

To provide these, he said, there must be an enrollment of approximately 2500 white students, with 1200 to 1500 at Towson, and 350 to 500 each at Salisbury and Frostburg, with an additional 300 at Bowie for Negro schools.

As for Frostburg, Pullen said it should be retained in western Maryland because "of the proximity of the school to the students in the local area."

Dr. Isaiah Bowman of Johns Hopkins University, Dr. John S. Kieffer of St. John's, and Dr. Gilbert W. Meade of Washington College also appeared before the council.

Kieffer said the commission's recommendation that the St. John's subsidy be discontinued resulted from a misconception of the school's situation and aims.

Meade said Washington College needed more State help, but did not feel that the institution should be taken over by the State as recommended.

Red Star Takes Issue With U. S. On Army Figures

Moscow, July 2 (AP).—The Russian army newspaper Red Star declared today the United States was prepared to spend more money to maintain its armed forces and develop new weapons than any other country in the world.

The newspaper took sharp issue with Lieut. Gen. J. Lawton Collins, head of the United States Army's information section, who declared recently the American Army was capable at present of putting only 10 divisions in the field.

(Collins told a convention of the National Reserve Officers Association in Miami June 19 that Russia could put 200 divisions into the field, as compared with the "10 divisions in the whole United States Army." He said Russian soldiers now outnumber American soldiers "20 to 1."

(Gen. Dwight D. Eisenhower, Army Chief of Staff, told Congress June 28 that the American Army was a "poor second" to Russia's.)

Dr. Newbill, Psychiatrist, Found Dead

Special to The Post

Charlottesville, Va., July 2.—Dr. Hugh Page Newbill, 37, superintendent of Dejarnette Sanatorium, Staunton, Va., was found dead today in his cabin residence, Sunny Acres, 9 miles north of here. Police said there was no evidence of foul play.

The well-known psychiatrist had apparently been dead two weeks, police said.

His body, attired in bathrobe and lying on a bed, was found by investigators summoned by his secretary, Miss Margaret Hanger, of this city. Miss Hanger, accompanied by Mrs. Montgomery Hunter, of Staunton, sanatorium bookkeeper, drove to the retreat cabin to see why she hadn't heard from her employer in two weeks.

The two found the cabin unlocked and Dr. Newbill's car in the driveway, but received no response to their shouts.

Last December, Dr. Newbill, an assistant professor of psychiatry at the University of Virginia Medical School, was named head of the Dejarnette Sanatorium, succeeding Dr. J. S. Dejarnette, who had resigned in July, 1945.

A native of Norfolk, Dr. Newbill studied in public schools there and majored in chemistry at William and Mary College. He was graduated from the University of Virginia Medical School in 1938 and was associated there with Dr. David C. Wilson, professor of psychiatry.

He belonged to local, State and national medical societies and associations and had written numerous scientific articles dealing with mental and nervous disorders.

Cool Weather and Beetles Retard Maryland Corn Crop

Baltimore, July 2 (AP).—Japanese beetles—a perennial menace to Maryland crops—coupled with continuation of unseasonable cool weather during the week have retarded corn in some areas, the Weather Bureau reported today.

The crop report by sections:

Garrett, Allegany and Washington Counties—Small grains being harvested, with crop prospects averaging a little better than good. Corn, although of good color, is slow-in Garrett County, and warmer weather is needed. It is growing well elsewhere. Some early tomatoes are ripening in Washington County. Tree fruits continue to size nicely, but some are having heavy drops. Transparent apples will be ready for harvest in Washington County next week. Fine hay crops are being harvested.

Counties west of the Chesapeake Bay—Barley harvest has ended in southern counties and is continuing in northern counties with yields good to excellent. Wheat is being harvested in some southern counties with some early yields poor. Corn averages about good, but needs more warm weather. Truck crops and gardens are good and improving. Sweet corn is in tastel in Calvert County and early squash and cucumbers are being picked. Tree fruits continue to size nicely. Cherries, raspberries and southern blackberries are being picked. Field conditions in southern tobacco counties are improving and plants are growing well. Pastures are good to excellent.

Fiancee, Left Sum by Hero, Now Married

Special Dispatch to The Post

Winchester, Va., July 2.—The girl he left behind, who married someone else, stands to lose $5000 she might have received under the will of Capt. Allison Hartman, of this city. Captain Hartman died three years ago on a Jap prison ship.

The will, penned September 1, 1943, at American Prisoners Camp No. 1, Cabanatuan, Philippine Islands, nearly a year before his death, has been admitted to probate in Corporation Court here.

Captain Hartman stipulated that his fiancee, Miss Mary Martha Lenora Shade, of Winchester, receive $5000 of pay due him from the United States Government, providing she remained single, "and faithful in the eyes of C. S. Hartman," Captain Hartman's father.

Miss Shade, who reportedly never heard from the captain after he was taken prisoner at the fall of Bataan (April, 1942), became Mrs. Robert B. Wheeler in October, 1943, a month after the will's writing.

The captain left $5000 each from his insurance to his mother, Mrs. Dora Hartman, and a sister, Miss Ethel Hartman. He directed that after specific bequests were met his father, named as executor, receive his "remaining worldly possessions."

Among heirs listed in Corporation Court records here was the name of Louise Hartman, San Francisco, Calif. Captain Hartman received a bed and board divorce from her prior to entering the service. There is no record here of absolute decree, but Mrs. Hartman may have received one, it was stated.

House Unit Backs Bill to Revive Sugar Quota Act

The House Agriculture Committee yesterday approved legislation which would revise the entire calculating basis of the Sugar Quota Act and give Cuban producers a greatly-increased share of the United States market.

Chairman Clifford R. Hope (R., Kans.) said the measure, which Republican leaders hope to put through the House and Senate before the summer adjournment late this month, was approved "almost unanimously."

Based on an expected domestic consumption of 7,500,000 tons annually, the legislation would allocate 4,268,000 tons of that market to domestic beet and cane producers, including those in Hawaii, Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands.

Cuba would be allocated 98.64 per cent; or 2,275,600 tons, of the remaining 2,307,000 tons. The final 1.36 per cent would be divided among other sugar producing nations.

Delegates to the department's silver anniversary encampment took the action in a resolution that demanded also that persons who practice or preach the creed of communism "be forthwith deported from this country . . . and that such deportation be effective as to citizens and noncitizens alike."

Tonight, the veterans attended an initiation ceremony conducted by the V. F. W. degree team from Washington, while the ladies' auxiliary attended a reception in honor of Gold Star Mothers. Still later tonight, veterans and auxiliary members attended a military ball in the Norfolk Auditorium arena.

Election of officers tomorrow will wind up the five-day encampment.

Black Legion Conduct in Depression Recalled; Truman Checking on Deserting Democrats

By Drew Pearson

"The District Line" by Bill Gold is being suspended during Bill's vacation.

Lest We Forget—Some Congressmen seem apathetic about my allegation that their colleague, Representative Robert F. Jones (R., Ohio), was once a member in the Black Legion. Perhaps they have forgotten depression days when the Black Legion was to the Ku Klux Klan what a cobra is to a garter snake.

Jones

(Representative Jones denied emphatically on Tuesday that he was ever a member of the Black Legion—Editor's Note.)

Black Legion started after Ku Klux Klan got smoked out by too much publicity but proved it was a good money racket . . . Dr. William Shepherd, Bellaire, Ohio, health commissioner, explains about the legion's origin as follows: "I was exalted cyclops of KKK but withdrew when Grand Dragon Colescott objected to my wearing a black robe. So I organized a 'black guard' in Ohio . . . Pretty soon the darn thing grew by leaps and bounds," continued Dr. Shepherd. "Everybody round here wanted to be one of my blacks, and started organizing black groups. You have to have mystery in a fraternal thing to keep it alive. The folks eat it up."

Came the Depression. With jobs scarce, the Black Legion got out of hand. Many labor people joined and escorted small businessmen before eerie night meetings to threaten them with fires or bodily harm if they discharged men—joining the Black Legion was one way to keep your job . . . In Detroit, however, industrialists were accused of using the Black Legion as vigilantes to combat organized labor . . . Heart of Ohio's Black Legion was Lima, home of Representative Jones, now nominated to the all-important Federal Communications Commission . . . Also living in Lima is former National Commander Virgil H. Effinger, who signed an affidavit in 1938 naming Jones as a Black Legionnaire . . . Another legionnaire, Glenn E. Webb, then on the Black Legion initiating crew, swears Jones knelt before him on a farm outside Lima, took the oath of membership . . . Ceremony occurred in 1935, when the legion was riding the crest.

Organized Intolerance—Roy Howard's New York World-Telegram has described it: "The Black Legion's crimes are part of a larger picture of intolerence in America. They are cut from the same picture as anti-Red foreys into campuses, vigilante and lynching mobs, antilabor terrorism and other manifestations of special-interest racketeering wrapped up in the garb of patriotism."

Do Farmers Strike?

Farm Bureau President Ed O'Neal, long one of the smoothest lobbyists at the Capitol, was almost, but not quite, set back on his heels last week by young Representative Walter Huber of Akron, Ohio, during O'Neal's testimony before the Joint Congressional Committee on the Economic Report.

Huber, who is developing into a skillful debater, stopped O'Neal to take up the question of strikes, the farm chieftain having said he might favor an even more drastic labor measure than the Taft-Hartley Bill.

"How then do you justify the strike having been called by the meat-producing farmers last fall?" Huber asked the strike-hating O'Neal.

"They just wouldn't get out meat, is that it?" Huber persisted.

"The law of supply and demand ruled," said O'Neal.

"If you can compel the workingman to sell his labor for a certain price under certain conditions," persisted the Ohio Congressman, "then could you not compel the farmer to sell his produce, which he produces through his sweat, with the help of God and nature, for a certain price also?"

"I say we believe in collective bargaining; sure we do," O'Neal replied.

Here Committee Chairman, Senator Bob Taft, jumped in apprehensively to protest: "There is nothing in this bill (the Taft-Hartley bill) that makes any man work for anything that he does not agree to work for, except that he continues to work for 60 days after his contract ends."

"The Government sets up the wages for which he should work," said Huber.

"No," Taft replied, "there is only a 60-day period in there in a case where the whole Nation is affected by an industry. He has to continue the status quo for 60 days."

O'Neal then spoke of the long hours worked by farmers, and their anger about "how the other fellow works."

"Well," replied Huber, "I represent three rural counties and I have the highest opinion in the world for farmers and industry. But I also found some farmers who worked part time in our factories in addition to taking care of their own work."

Grin and Bear It

"Well, he's got the same opportunities as Abe Lincoln—except he hasn't the advantages of a log cabin"

The Bridge Deck

By Florence Osborn

The East player of today's tournament deal pleased his partner by preventing declarer from running dummy's long suit. His imaginative defense meant the difference between an easy game and a three-trick set of three no-trump.

West opened the three of spades small from the board and East put on the eight. Ordinarily he would have played his highest spade, but he wished to retain the king to prevent dummy's jack from providing declarer an entry to the clubs.

Declarer won with the spade, led the club jack and finessed it, East letting it win. Declarer continued the club eight and overtook with dummy's nine and East ended South's hope of a game by producing the king.

Declarer now managed to win only six tricks; two spades, a club, two hearts and a diamond. He was set three tricks, losing a club, two spades, two hearts and two diamonds.

If East goes up with the spade king on the opening lead, declarer wins the ace, sets up the clubs, re-enters dummy with the spade jack and runs the long clubs.

HERE is a pleasant little game that will give you a message every day. It is a numerical puzzle designed to spell out your fortune. Count the letters in your first name. If the number of letters is 6 or more, subtract 4. If the number is less than 6, add 3. The result is your key number. Start at the upper left-hand corner of the rectangle and check every one of your key numbers, left to right. Then read the message the letters under the checked figures give you.

Popcorn Time

My wife objects to popcorn when . . . We see a picture show . . . Though popcorn is my paradise . . . When I agree to go . . . She tells me that she cannot stand . . . The cracking, crunching sound . . . And she maintains that it disturbs . . . The patrons all around . . . But I am never happy when . . . I sit before the screen . . . Unless I have some popcorn fresh . . . To go with every scene . . . It seems to me this pleasure is . . . A most important part . . . Of trying to appreciate . . . The motion picture art . . . Because a box of popcorn keeps . . . My stomach satisfied . . . Throughout the time my eyes and ears . . . Are so preoccupied.
